84. If a judge pass a wrong sentence in a suit, and the person upon whom the wrong sentence was passed oppose him, and give a pledge against him, before he rises from the judgment seat, and he take not the pledge while in his judgment seat, and give none; and, nevertheless, the person who opposed the sentence give his pledge into the lord's hand, and testify to giving his pledge and that none was given against him, and, thereupon, the lord dismiss the session and the parties; and afterwards the judge repent the not confirming his sentence, and the person on whom the wrong sentence was passed say, that he is not to mutually pledge, as he did not mutually pledge in his judgment seat: the law says, that he can neither mutually pledge, nor confirm a sentence but in a judgment seat; and as he did not there mutually pledge, he cannot afterwards; and the wrong sentence is acknowledged, and is void, and three kine of camlŵrw fall upon the judge to the lord: for it is not right to take his tongue as if his pledging had failed.

85. In one case, in law, mutual pledging is to take place with a judge out of his judgment seat : by passing a wrong sentence upon an absent person through contempt, such person can mutually pledge with him when he will during a year and a day, if he be in the same country with him ; thenceforward the law bars him as a claim beyond the year : if he be not in the same country as the judge, he can, after coming to the same country, mutually pledge with him when he will, unless he neglect to claim to pledge during a year and a day, which, if he do, the law is closed between him and the judge.

86. If a person swear to theft in the hand of another, and that person lays it to an arwaesav, and the arwaesav take it not from him, it, nevertheless, having come to him by gift, or by loan, or by bargain, with a surety thereon, and he will not, lest he lose property on its account ; the law says, that he is to prove that it came from the arwaesav, because, although sworn to as theft in the hand of the first, the first does not cast it as theft to an arwaesav ; and, therefore, he may make use against him of surety and evidences.

87. If a person swear to a thing in another's hand as theft, and that thing have no legal worth, and, for that cause, the defender of the thief seek to save him, although the thing be worth much, as no one is to be executed but for the worth of four pence and above ; then it is right for the owner again to swear, that for the property he might have so much, and would give no less ; and if the appraisement be more than the four pence, let the thief lose his life for that property, as if it had a legal worth ; and if the appraisement be less than the four pence, let him be a saleable thief.

88. If a lord do a thing which is not right, and the person to whom it shall be done acquiesce, and continue so for long ;
it is necessary for the judges to be guiders, and of long consideration before redressing that after being done. If he should put it to the judges that a wrong was doing ; it is right for the judges to be sharp, to oppose the wrong before it be done, rather than to redress it after being done.

if he were himself upon the land. If the defendant say, that he is not to give an answer but upon the land, and that this is not the land whereto the claim lies, and shall not require time ; it is right to adjudge him not to give an answer ; and since he asked not for time, he goes without time. If he say, he is not to give an answer other than upon the land whereto the claim lies, and require the time to which he is entitled by law ; it is right to adjudge time to him, since he requires it : the time is until the following day, upon the land, unless it be Sunday, or Monday. Others say, as to times not specified in the law, that those times are to be at the pleasure of the judges, except that the time cannot exceed a fortnight and a day, since that is the longest time in the law.

7. If a person claim land, and, on the first day, the defendant quit the field, it is right to impose a camlwrw upon him ; and for the lord to assign a time at his pleasure ; and, if he should quit the field at the second time, a camlwrw likewise upon him ; and, if after the parties have been seated, and loss and gain is left in the hands of the pleader, he quit the field, he is for ever cast as to his claim. ¹⁹If on the third day, before pleading, he quit the field, to be debarred during the life of the lord who shall own the field on that day ; if, after pleading, to be debarred for ever.

8. If a person obtain right, from a lord, to land and soil, and the defendant refuse pleading, and the lord call upon the judges for a decision in respect thereto ; it is right to adjudge on him three kine camlwrw ; in the second court likewise a camlwrw ; in the third court, if still refusing, the claimant is to be put in possession : and his claim to be renewable when he will.

9. If time for aid be adjudged to a person as to land and soil, it is right for all to come with their essentials to the land ; and then it is right for the judges to ask the claimant, if he will stand to his suit : ' I will,' says he. And then it is right for the judge to ask the defendant, if he will abide the law : ' I will,' says he. And then it is right for the judge to ask the lord, if he will let the law take its course between them : ' I will let it,' says he. And thence onward the law is to be under the controul of the judges : and nothing is of effect but what they shall permit. Then it is right for the judges ³⁵or the judge' to ask, who shall speak for them : and then it is right for them to say who shall speak for them. Then it is right to sit in legal manner, as set forth in the book of Howel : and next, according to some, it is right for the lord to demand sureties in law ; according to others, the pleader for the claimant is to demand surety in law. And then it is right for the defendant's pleader to say, that he will not give surety in law, until he shall hear the claim, and its extent, and what law is to be abided ⁴⁶upon, or⁴⁷ by, and that according to the requisite law. Then it is right for the claimant's pleader to set forth the claim, and its extent ; whether he willeth to claim by propriety ; or by kin and descent ; or by dadenhudd ; or by maternity ; or by mutual strife ; or by mutual meering. And then it is right to give surety in law : which implies pledges of living persons, and that into the hands of the servants of the lord ; two persons, or more, ⁴⁸from each party. ⁴⁹The sureties are taken, lest a homeless pauper come to claim land, and tire party and session, and when he willeth withdraw from the country without rendering compensation ; and again do the same thing.

10. If by propriety he mind to claim ; then it is right for the claimant to begin making and setting forth the extent of his claim, and to say that he is proprietor of this land and soil by kin and descent ; and to his having been unlawfully ejected therefrom ; and that, if there be any who shall doubt his being proprietor, there are for him enough to guard his being a proprietor ; ⁵⁰and, should any doubt his being unlawfully ejected, that there are for him enough who know it. If there be no denial against him, it is right that he should have his claim. If there be a denial against him, it is right to allow him his arddelw, and ⁵¹if his arddelw stand, and he obtain it, let him take his claim. If it be objected against him, that he has two arddelws, guardians, and evidences, saying, that they ought not to be allowed in the same claim : ' God knows,' says the claimant, ' where-soever I may be doubted, as to what I have asserted, I will to have guardians where they ought to be, and evidences where they ought to be, to the truth of what I have said ; and to the law I appeal, that I am to have those.' firm the claim, and so he is entitled to what he said, in the case where he is doubted.
 If a person say to him in answer: 'God knows, if thou hast been here, thou hast departed lawfully from off this land and soil, and, if thou doubttest that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that the person who once departs lawfully from land and soil is not to be car-returning to it; and, therefore, thou oughtest not to come here.' And then it is right for the claimant to say: 'God knows, I have said that I have been unlawfully ejected from hence, and that I have put in the mouths of evidences and arddelw; and I appeal to the law, that I am to make use of my arddelw and my evidences, before I am to answer to any one further.' The law says, it is not lawful for a proprietor to go off his patrimony, except by his own will, and that it is not easy to prove the will of any one; and, besides, his arddelw is not to be taken from any one: and, if his arddelw stand, let

11. There is no objection to guardians; nevertheless it is necessary that they be respectable.' There cannot be guardians of land and soil, but such as are borderers on the land: borderers are men, the meers of whose lands abut upon the land to which there is a claim: others say, that guardians may consist of men of the cymwd wherein the land may be to which the claim is; and the most unobjectionable are the borderers of the land as guardians; and, therefore, alltuda cannot be guardians of land.

16. The oath of evidences is, to seeing and knowing what they are to speak of.

17. The oath of a witness is, to its having been previously testified to him as to what he is swearing of.

18. The oath of a nod-man is, to be in accordance with what is sworn by the criminal.

19. The oath of another raith-man is, that it appears most likely to him that what he swears to is true.

20. The oath of a criminal is, to deny to the extent of what is charged against him.

21. If a person claim land by propriety, and the defendant say: 'God knows,' says he, 'I am not to answer thee as to that claim; because thou wert heretofore cast, by justice and law, by me; and, if thou doubtest that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that such as have been once cast by justice and law, are never to be answered.' If the claimant deny it, the defendant is to be allowed his evidences. If he acknowledge it, let the former decision be abided by. If the claimant say: 'God knows,' says he, 'if I have been heretofore cast, by wrong law, I have also mutually pledged with him who adjudged it, and it has been rejudged to me again; and, if thou doubtest that, there are for me enough who know it; and afterwards thou hast forcibly dispossessed me; and to-day I am calling for my right.' If the defendant deny it, it is then right to allow the claimant his 'evidences. If the defendant acknowledge it, let the property be restored to the claimant, by reversal of the judgment given theretofore.

22. If by mutual strife a person choose his claim; there cannot be mutual strife but by two persons, who shall be seated upon the same land together: and if one of them will to strive against the other, in the day that he shall commence, it is right to say, he is a proprietor of this land and the soil wholly. And let him say that he is under an unlawful intrusion, and naming the intrusion: 'and, if there be any who shall doubt my being the true proprietor of this land wholly, there are for me those who know it; and, if there be any who shall doubt his being an intruder ³⁵and unentiit; and therefore I am, this day, minded to cast the intrusion from me; and am calling for my due, and appealing to the law that I am entitled.' If the defendant deny that, it is right to allow the claimant his evidences. ²If the defendant acknowledge that, it is right to allow the claimant his claim.' If the defendant say: 'God knows, it is I who am proprietor of this land, and as a sign ⁴of that being true,' I am guarding my propriety: and, if there be any who shall doubt what I say being true, there are for me enough who will guard my propriety and guardianship in the manner that one entitled should guard his propriety and guardianship; and to the law I appeal, to my being more entitled to keep my propriety and guardianship than for thee to keep what is not in thy guardianship, and which ought not to be; and, therefore, I will make use of my guardians in the first instance, and I have a right to do so.' And then it is right for the claimant to say: 'God knows, I first said that I was the proprietor, and entitled to this land wholly, and thou an intruder; and although thou hast been able to take my land by force, thou couldest not prevent my being an entitled proprietor; and over my propriety and my title I have placed guardians and evidences of thy being an intruder, and that first; and to the law I appeal, that I have a right to make use of them first.' The law says, in what place soever a person shall say that he is entitled to land and soil, although a person may have lost the fruition of his due, he has not lost the due; and he has a right to bring forward guardians of his due, and that first; and after that the guardians of the defendant are to be made use of. And, if every one of them stand, let the object of contention be adjudged to be shared, and it becomes a claim of equation: and the one whose arddelw does not stand, let him wholly lose his claim. If each one endeavours to cast the other through ⁶guardians, and each of their guardians stand; let each of them ⁷abide upon his guardianship. If the guardians of one fail him, let his ⁸arddelw fail him. The law says, it is more just for the fruition to follow the due, than for the due to follow the fruition.

it ; and to the law I appeal, that I gave my sister to an inheritor ; and that the son of another inheritor is not to return as an inheritor over me.' Unless the claimant rebut that, let his evidences be adjudged to him ; and, if they stand to him, let the claimant then be cast. If the claimant say : ' God knows,' says he, ' to the extent that I have said, I produced evidences of its being true, if I should have been doubted ; and, to the law I appeal, that evidences are not to rise in opposition to those of mine, until it be known whether they stand, or do not stand, since what I have said has been doubted.' It is right to adjudge his evidences to him ; and that none shall be made use of against him, because he has been doubted.

time when the law is open as to land and soil, and let him say, that he has been, or his father before him, seated upon this land and the soil through investiture by a lord, with tith and ploughing, and house and chattels, for year and years; and of his having been unlawfully ejected therefrom;
'and, if there be any who shall doubt that, there are for me enough who know' of his having been so long as that; and, if there be any who shall doubt his having been unlawfully ejected, that there are for him enough who know it; and appealing to the law that he is entitled to come to re-uncover the 'hearth uncovered by him, or by his father before him. And the defendant answer him: 'God knows,' says he, 'if thou hast been here, lawfully thou hast gone from here; and, if thou doubttest that, there are for me enough who know' of thy having gone; and, besides that, I am a proprietor, seated upon my propriety; and, if be any who shall doubt that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that the man who departs lawfully from land and soil once, is not to be permitted to car-return, by law.' And then it is right for the claimant to say:
'God knows,' says he, 'for so long as I have said I was here, and of my having been unlawfully ejected from hence, I have put guardians and evidences, of its being true what I have spoken, and that before thee; and, to the law I appeal, since I have put them before thee, it is my right to make use of them first.' And then it is right to permit him to make use of them first; and, if they stand for him, let there be adjudged to him as much as he shall claim of land to be seated on, and for tith and ploughing, and without any along with him of the men who have been in opposition to him: and so he is to remain, until he shall turn his back upon the stack in the ensuing harvest, and then to answer; and, on the ninth day of the kalends of winter, law. And then, if the defendant can prove himself to be a proprietor, let the non-proprietor depart before him. And, if there be an equation between the two parties and the two dues, let them share equally; and let them both be seated thereon.

29. If a person claim land and soil by dadenhudd by tilth and ploughing, let him come upon the land, and say, that he had been upon this land seated for year and years, by grant and investiture by a lord, and tilth and ploughing for him thereon; and that he had been unlawfully ejected therefrom; and, if there be any who shall doubt that, that there are for him enough who know of its being true what he says. And then the defendant answer: 'God knows,' says he, 'if thou hast been here so long as thou sayest; and if thou hast been unlawfully ejected from hence; thou hast claimed here by dadenhudd, and thou hast had it; and, after it was had by thee, thou wert cast from hence, as one entitled casts one unentitled by justice and law; and, if thou doubttest that, there are for me enough who know of its being true, to the extent I have spoken.' Unless the claimant deny that, let the defendant testify it against him; and let him call for judgment; and let him say, that he has not denied having had a dadenhudd theretofore in respect to it; and let him appeal to the law, that he is not entitled to two dadenhudds of the same land. And then it is right to debar the claimant for ever of that dadenhudd. If the claimant deny that he had a dadenhudd theretofore, let the defendant be allowed his evidences; and, if they stand, let the claimant be for ever debarred of his claim.

30. A judge can be a judge, and a witness, as to a thing testified to him on his judgment seat: and he cannot be a witness, or an evidence, or a guardian, as to any thing he may have seen before the arrangement of the two parties, if he mind to be a judge upon that suit.

31. If a judge be a judge upon suits, and be partial among other judges in giving judgment, and another judge should oppose him, and say that he is ²partial; and he should answer, and say to the other, that he is ³more partial; it is right for the ⁴impartial judges then to see which of them it is most proper to dismiss from the judgment.'

32. If one of the persons concerned in the suit should imagine that a judge is partial in his decision, and should object to him on that account, and the judge represent to his brother judges his innocence, and they should adjudge him innocent; he is not to be removed from the judgment; and is not to be objected to on that account.

33. Whoever may will to object to a judge, let him object before the judge shall have arranged the parties, and mutual pledging; and if he do not then object, he cannot object to him for what he may have ever done before of wrong. There is no objecting to a judge except for what he may do of wrong from the time he enter on the suit until he quit it; or else for having accepted fee and worth formerly against that suit; or for having been a pleader formerly therein.

34. If two persons be pleading before a judge, and the one of them speak a losing word, and the other testify concerning it to the gwrda of the field, and without testifying to the judge, such a testimony is null; since neither of the two parties is to say any thing in his place of judgment, that he will to have the benefit of, but that the judge may hear it; and nothing is to be testified in his presence, without its being testified to him first: and, therefore, a testimony is null, which is not testified to him first.

35. If a person, in pleading in the presence of a judge, testify a thing to the judge and gwrda; and when he shall seek to make use of that testimony, the judge shall deny having heard such testimony, it is right for the person to bring the relics to him; and, if the judge do not wholly deny it upon those relics, let the testimony stand.'

36. If a person testify a thing in the presence of judges and the gwrdas, and some of the judges deny that, and others acknowledge it along with 'the gwrdas;' the testimony stands, ³⁷although there may be but one of the judges acknowledging it with the gwrdas: for it is sufficient to testify to a judge and gwrdas, in their place of judgment.

37. If a person object to a judge, as partial in the field, before entering the place of judgment to decide, his own oath alone is required to exculpate himself; and no objection whatever is to affect him, that may be brought, save two: those are, either accepting a fee and worth unlawfully; or else having been a pleader before in that suit: ³⁸if either of these two can be proved against him, that is a lawful objection against him.'

38. A judge in a judgment he may pronounce is to be credited, as to what he decided, and what he did not decide, if he acknowledge having decided: if he deny having decided, then he is not to speak as to a judgment which he shall deny; and, if he can be proved to have adjudged, let the judgment stand.

39. There is no objecting to a pleader, but his having given a compact, or other security, that he would not come against that cause, or against him who shall employ him.

40. There is no objecting to a judge, nor to a pleader, by law, in regard to their moral conduct; for laics are not to judge the ³⁹sins of any body; neither is a person of less degree than a priest to judge of ⁴⁰sins, or to absolve them.

41. If two persons be minded to mutually meer, it is proper to repair to the land and the meer; and then it is right for the claimant to show his privilege, whether he be a canghellor, or a maer, or any other officer, whose privilege may be higher than the privilege of the defendant; or a proprietor, or else having guardianship, which may not be the case of the defendant. After that, let the defendant show his meer also, and his guardianship; and neither let him go as to the claimant over the three stays of boundary: and let both of them say upon their oath, that what they have shown is their meer. And after that let the elders of the cymwd go and inspect which of them is most right; and if they ascertain which of them is in the right, let the meer be adjudged to him, and he to take possession of it; and if the elders do not ascertain which of them is most in the right; let the judges go out, and decide the claim according to the law of equation, and let them share the object of contention. 43. If a person claim property taken by force, and the defendant answer by a denial, it is right to adjudge the denial to him; for there cannot be evidences as to force: because there is a fixed raith, in law, concerning it, and evidences are not to be in a case where a raith is to be. The amount of that raith is, the oaths of fifty men. If he acknowledge it, let the spoil be restored without claim, without sur-claim, thereon. If the defendant say: 'God knows,' says he, 'I am not to answer thee as to that claim; because I have restored to thee the spoil which thou claimest of me, and have settled with thee concerning it; and, if thou doubtest that, there are for me enough who know that it is true what I say.' It is necessary for the claimant then either to deny that, or to avouch some other thing that may be better. If the claimant deny that, let the evidences of the defendant be made use of; since it is not as to the force that he has produced his evidences, but as to the restoration and the settlement. If he acknowledge the restoration and the settlement, let that be abided by. If the claimant say: 'God knows,' says he, 'I will not deny the restoration of what has been restored to me of my property forcibly taken, and that is a penny, and a pound was the property taken from me; and to the law I appeal, although only one penny be due of the property taken from me, there is due to me a denial as to that equally as for the pound; or else restoration to me of the spoil.' If the defendant deny that, let him deny in the manner mentioned by us above. If he acknowledge it, let the spoil be restored, with a dirwy to the lord. If the defendant say, that he testifies to the lord, and to the judges, and to the gwrdas, that it has not been denied that there was a restoration and a settlement ⁷concerning that spoil; but that the whole of that property was not had; and should appeal to the law, that it is no longer force but a debt; and, to deny a debt, without security thereon, without proof, there is only required of him his own oath to deny it. The law says of a debt, without security thereon, without proof, that there is only to be one tongue urging, and another denying.

44. If a person claim a thing by surreption; let him say, that the property was taken surreptitiously and against his will; and, if there be any who shall doubt it, that there are for him enough who know it; and appeal to the law, that the moveables that were removed ⁴unlawfully out of his custody, and naming that property, ought to come lawfully back to him. If the defendant does not deny that, the property comes back, in its former condition; ²³and let him pay a camlwrw to the lord. If he deny it, let the evidences of the ⁴claimant be made use of. If the defendant say: 'God knows,' says he, 'I am not to answer thee as to that claim, because the thing thou chargest upon me as having taken unlawfully and surreptitiously from thee, thou hast taken back without asking, and without leave from me, and unlawfully; and, if thou doubttest that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that such property ought to come back to me, before I am to answer thee concerning it.' Unless the claimant deny that, it is at his choice, either to restore the property to the defendant, and the law open for him to proceed when he shall be minded to claim; or, if he like it better, let the property remain with him, and let him be silent. knows,' says he, 'the property which thou sayest has been taken by me unlawfully, thou hast made over to me for so and so; and, if thou doubtest that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that a counter-claim is not to be set up thus against me for my claim.' If the defendant deny that, let the evidences of the claimant be made use of: and, if he do not deny, ¹but acknowledge it, let the property be restored to the claimant, as we have said above. If the defendant ²say, that he testifies to the judges and the gwrdsas that the claimant has not denied the removal of the property unlawfully, as he said of him, and willeth to benefit from that, and praying for judgment. And the claimant say: 'God knows,' says he, 'a denial is not needed beyond a stay: a lawful arddelw I have, a stay in the law; and that is, the property which thou hast said I have taken from thee unlawfully, I re-assert to be property delivered by thee to me on account of another debt; and to the law I appeal, that until my arddelw shall fail me, it is not necessary for me to deny beyond a stay.' If the defendant choose to have judgment pronounced upon him, according to the ³arddelw produced by the claimant, because he made no denial against what he said of him, it is right to pronounce judgment upon him. And the law there says, that there is no lawful answer, except one of three: acknowledgment, or denial, or a lawful arddelw: and a lawful arddelw is a stay of law: and a stay of law is any thing that shall turn the law from the subject, concerning which there is a mutual arguing, to another thing which shall ⁴be as good as it, or better, so as to become necessary to arrest the law in respect to it, or in respect to the testimony that shall be produced thereon. And on that account ⁵an arddelw is called a stay of law; because the law will stay when arrested when it shall be taken off one thing to another thing; and, therefore, ⁶a denial is not necessary beyond a stay: and, therefore, it is right to restrict the defendant, and to make use of the witnesses of the claimant. And there is a pleading as to property that cannot be produced ⁷to be seen.'

45. If a person see his property present, after having been unlawfully taken, it is right for him to come up to the property, and to say, that such property belonged to him, and that he was owner of it when such a person took it from him unlawfully, and surreptitiously; and, if there should be any who shall doubt that, that there are for him enough who know it, and who will secure to him the ownership of that property; and that there are also for him enough who know of the taking of that property surreptitiously from him; and appeal to the law, that such property is to come back to him, in its former condition, by his confirming that it is true what he says. If the defendant say: 'God knows,' says he, 'I am not to answer thee as to that claim, for thou hast two arddelws, to wit, guardians and evidences; and I am to answer only one of them.' Then it is right for the claimant to say: 'God knows,' says he, 'two things that are true I have said; that the property was mine, and that it was taken surreptitiously from me; and to those two things I produced two confirmations, guardians and evidences, in the place where I was doubted concerning them. If thou dost acknowledge the truth of what I have said, there is for me then no need of either of them: if thou dost deny what I have said, I appeal to the law, that I am entitled to adduce my confirmation, to what thou mayest deny, by those two.' The law says, that in what case soever it may be necessary for a person to state the causes in the law, ³⁰along with the matter of the action, it is necessary for him to prove the causes, as he shall prove the matter. The matter of the action then is, that the property belongs to him; and the cause of the action is, the taking of the property unlawfully and surreptitiously from him; and, therefore, he is entitled to guardians as to the property being his, and to evidences as to the property having been surreptitiously taken from him. If the defendant deny the surreption, let the proof of the claimant be made use of. If he acknowledge it, let what is surreptitiously taken be restored. its being true what I say, there are for me enough of unobjectionable guardians.' Then it is right for the claimant to say: 'God knows,' says he, 'I have promised proof before thou hast promised it, and, therefore, I am entitled to make use of it first, and it is in the field; and I will to make use of it before thee.' 'God knows,' says the defendant, 'I am guarding what is mine, through regular guardians; and to the law I appeal, of its being more just for me to keep what is mine in my possession through regular guardians, than for thee to adduce proof which thou oughtest not against me.' 'God knows,' says the claimant, 'proof I promised in the place where it was lawful for me to promise it; and to the law I appeal, that in the place where I promise lawful proof first, I am to have the benefit of it first.' The law says, in the place where two persons shall advance two proofs, a lawful proof, and another unlawful, although the unlawful one should be the first advanced, the lawful proof is the first, of right, to be made use of, if the essentials be in the field; and, if they be not, let those first promised be made use of: for it is not right to stop preparedness by unpreparedness. Each one of those two proofs was lawful; and, nevertheless, the lawful arddelw, which was made by the defendant, rendered it imperative upon the claimant to deny; and thereupon the proof reverted from the claimant to the defendant. And that is called an untoward law: an untoward law is, wheresoever the defendant shall divert the proof from the claimant to his own use: that is commensurate with circumverting the law; and on that account it is called an untoward law.

with having taken surreptitiously, I had thy will and consent to take and to remove;
and, if thou doubtest that, there are for me enough who know that it is true what I have said; and to the law I appeal, that the property, which has been removed, by thy will and thy consent, is not to revert to thy custody, under the character of surreption, for it cannot be surreption unless by non-consent, but with my will also and my consent; for lawfully the property came from thee; and there are for me enough who know of its being true what I have spoken. If the claimant deny it, let the proof be left to the defendant; and, if the proof succeed, let the property remain with him; but, if the proof do not succeed, let the property be restored to the claimant.

47. If the claimant then say: 'God knows,' says he, 'to the judges and the gwrdas I testify to thy taking me as an arwaesav of there being my will and consent for removing this property; and to the law I appeal, that I have my choice, whether I stand to thee, or do not stand;
and, likewise, I appeal to the law, that there is to be no witness as to an arwaesav, and the testimony, which thou hast promised to produce against me, is null; since I have my choice, and I choose for thee to fail; and to the law, therefore, I appeal, where thy arwaesav shall fail thee, that I am to have the property back in its former condition; and by what I have said I pray the decision of the judges.' If the defendant be silent thereto, let the property be adjudged to revert in its former condition to the claimant; and let the testimony upon the arwaesav be null, since it was not opposed. If the defendant say: 'God knows,' says he, 'upon the consideration of the judges and the gwrdas, who have heard me recapitulating my pleading, I rely, to the effect that I put neither loss nor gain in thy hands, nor restoration, nor acknowledgment of thy being an arwaesav to me; but have urged upon thee, whether displeasing, or pleasing to thee, that thy will and consent was had to the removal of that property; and to the law I appeal, that in a case where

I do not name thee as an arwaesav, and do not acknowledge thy being so, ¹it does not accord for either loss or gain to arise from the privilege of an arwacsav in thee; and since' thou art not an arwaesav, then I say, I am entitled to make use of my proof, for my arddelw is lawful; and, therefore, I will have a decision by the judges as to what I have said.' And then it is right for the judges and the gwrdas to withdraw aside, to call to remembrance what may be ²'necessary to them,' in returning whether he acknowledged the plaintiff as an arwaesav, or named him: and if they return, that he did not acknowledge, and did not name him ³'as an arwaesav,' let him be adjudged to have the benefit of his ⁴'evidences; and, if they succeed, let his guardianship be adjudged to him without car-return. Some say, in respect to such suits as these, that wheresoever a person shall uphold an arddelw by another, unless the arddelw stand to him willingly, that neither testimony nor proof can be made use of against him; but he is to be allowed to deny what is required, or else willingly acknowledge it. The law, nevertheless, says, that in what ⁵'case soever loss or gain shall not be put in his hands, as in the case of a surety, or a witness, or a contract-man, or an arwaesav in whose hands a person shall put a warranty to preserve him from wrong, or an arwacsav who shall promise to take a wrong from the hand of a person, and interpose between him and the wrong charged upon him, or else guardians, if promised in the place where they ought to be; although such men should entirely fail, there is required of them only to deny what may be committed to them: and, therefore, every other arddelw, on whom any thing shall be charged, if he deny, it can be proved against him, in the way we have spoken of above, that there was the will and consent of the claimant for removing the property that he is reclaiming.

prietor, that there are for him enough who can preserve his propriety; and, if any one shall assert his having had a share of it, that there are for him enough who know that he has not had it. Unless it be denied that he is one entitled to a share of this land, it is right to share with him. If it be denied, it is right to make use of his guardians and his evidences. If the defendant say: 'God knows,' says he, 'I do not deny thy having been a proprietor here; nevertheless,' says he, 'a house-plot thou hast had for this place, and thou didst accept of it, and that is in thy possession; and, if thou deniest that, there are for me enough who know that it is true; and to the law I appeal, that by thy having had thy all, that thou oughtest not to have any thing from me.' If the claimant acknowledge that, let him rest with what he has had. If he deny it, let the evidences of the defendant be made use of. If he should say: 'God knows,' says he, 'I began claiming, with saying I was one entitled, and that I had not had a share; and, if there were any who should doubt my being entitled, that there were for me enough who know of my not having had a share of this land; and it was not that I had been a proprietor I directed my guardians to say, but that I was so at present; and the cause why I am thus making a claim is, from my not having had a share thereof; and thou hast not denied my being a proprietor; and to the law I appeal, that the arddelw that thou hast spoken of is no obstacle to my having the benefit of my witnesses and my guardians.' The law says, where a person is entitled to a thing through witnesses and guardians, if it be wholly denied, that he is to have the benefit of his witnesses, if it be a suit wherein witnesses or guardians are to be produced.

49. If the words be acknowledged, and it be attempted to foil the claimant through some other lawful arddelw, the witnesses are then of no avail; because the person himself acknowledges what had been brought against him; and, therefore, there is no need of proof against him. Here the defendant has not denied what the claimant has adduced against him, and that was, of his being a true proprietor; ³⁷and he did not acknowledge further than his being a proprietor formerly: and, therefore, the law says, ³⁸that not being ■ complete ac-

53. If a person lend a thing to another; and a person come and swear to that loan in the hand of the person to whom the property has been lent; and, upon that, the person, in whose possession the loan is, offer the property to the person who lent it to him; and then the person who lent it say, that such property never belonged to him, and that he did not lend that property either to him, or to any one: the law says, that it is right for him, in whose possession such property is, to prove that the person from whom he had it lent it to him; and, if the proof succeed, let the other take the loan back, and answer for himself to the person that shall have sworn to it; and let him be liable to the claim. If the person who lent the property, say to him to whom it had been lent: 'God knows,' says he, 'I do not deny the having lent this to thee, nor its being mine; and, nevertheless, to the law I appeal, that my loan is to return to me, without claim, without sur-claim thereon, in the manner it went from me; and, without claim, without sur-claim, this went out of my possession; and, if thou doubttest that, there are for me enough who know it; and, therefore, I appeal to the law, that I am not to take what is mine from thee, until thou shalt divest it of the claim that is upon it; and, unless thou art able to divest it of the claim that is upon it, I then am entitled to what the law may assign instead of it.' If that be acknowledged by him in whose possession the loan is, it is right for him to free the loan from the claim that is thereon, and to give it to the owner, in as good a state as it came to him. If he deny that, let the proof rest with the owner of the loan; and, if the proof succeed, let the other free the loan to its owner from the claim; and, unless he can free it from the claim, let him pay the owner for his loan, as the law may assign. If he say: 'God knows,' says he, 'prior to the receipt of this loan by me, such a claim was upon it; and to the law I appeal, that I am not to free it from the claim that was upon it, ⁴⁰formerly, before its coming to me; and this claim was upon it,' when it came to me; and, if thou doubttest that, there are for me enough who know of its being true what I have said.' loan, with the claim upon it. If he deny it, let the proof rest with him to whom the property has been lent; and, if the proof succeed, let the loan go to its owner, with the claim upon it. If the owner of the loan say: 'God knows,' says he, 'it was with thee a claim was raised upon this loan, and there was no agitation of any claim thereon, when it went from me; and, if thou doubtest that, there are for me enough who know of its being true what I have spoken.' If the other acknowledge that, then it is right for him to 'prosecute a suit' as to the loan, until it be freed from the agitation of a claim thereon, and then to deliver the loan to its owner. If he deny that, it is right to leave the proof to the owner of the loan; and, if the proof succeed, 'the other is to prosecute a suit' as to the loan, until there shall be no agitation of a claim, and sur-claim thereon; and after that to deliver it to its owner; and, unless he be able to so render it, let him give to the owner what the law may assign in its stead. And so a loan is to be prosecuted.

[PLEADING.

I. PLEAS.]

1. If a person buy a horse, or an ox, or other property, the buyer is to take surety from the seller, upon that property, as to complete teithi; complete teithi imply, soundness, and dylsryydd: soundness is, warranty against three legal diseases to which are set time and termination; dylsryydd is, warrant to the buyer that no one else can seize or swear to it, or prove ownership thereof, and that it is his own property. And, in like manner, he is to receive surety upon the worth of the property, unless it be paid for in hand. And, if the animal were incomplete as to its teithi, then there might be two claimants, and two debtors; and the way of that is, if the buyer be disappointed in its teithi, whether a cow as to milk, or an ox as to ploughing, or a horse as to restiveness, or as to one of the three diseases that are to be answered for; then the buyer would be a claimant. If the seller should not get the worth of the property from the buyer; then he would be a claimant. And thus each of them would be a claimant upon the other; and each of them would be a debtor to the other.

2. If they should acknowledge the surety on both sides, in the contention between them, in that suit, the decision of the surety is to be credited; for he is one of the nine tavodiogs: and let whichever of the two parties doubt him put him to the relic.

3. We say this, however: whoever shall sell property, is to have its worth first; and, afterwards, let the person, who shall buy the property, if its teithi be incomplete, claim: for there ought not to be a counter claim, in opposition to the first debt; as the first debt is the first due. For, when the property was sold, there was the due at the sale; and there was no due for its teithi, until the beast was incomplete in its teithi; and its imperfection was not known when it was sold: and, on that account, it is called by three names; a debt of chance, and a debt hereafter, and a debt unknown; and the other is called by three different names; a certain debt, and a present debt, and a known debt.

4. If the dispute be referred to the surety, and he deny; let the claimant take the relic, if it be with him, and let him swear to the surety; and if the surety do not swear in opposition to him, let him be a surety as before; and let the claimant testify to there being enough of witnesses, to whom there can be neither objection nor doubt, when brought to extremity as to the surety, of his being a surety; and although he might say on his bare word that he was no surety, he would not bring it to extremity, before the court, where he is bound to bring it unless he were a surety: and since he brings it not to extremity, he is not to be believed on his loose word, against a thing of extremity by the other; and from that he is to be adjudged a surety.

5. If the surety mind to deny his suretiship; let him take the relic, if it be with him; and when it shall be sworn against him, of his being a surety, let him swear to God, and the relic that is in his hand, that he was not a surety; and let him say, in addition thereto, that he will deny, as the law may best decide: and thereupon it is right to judge between them.

6. If he seek to object to the surety, it will not avail him, according to law; because there is an established law for him without that; and there is to be neither objection nor proof against him: and whoever shall bring proof against him loses his claim: for the third thing in the law, by which a person loses his claim is, producing proof or testimony against a surety; and, unless he be objected to, or a testimony produced against him, he takes his denial, as it is established in the law.

7. If the debtor deny the surety, and the surety acknowledge; let the surety swear to his being a surety, to God, and the relic if it be with him, and, unless it be, let him swear in the hand of the lord; and let him say, in addition thereto, that he will prove his suretiship, in the manner the law best allows. And after that, let the debtor take the relic, and let him also swear to God, and the relic, of his not having given him as a surety; and of his hand not having been in the hand of the other; and of its being no surety without three hands; the hand of the person who shall give him, and the hand of the person who shall accept him, and the hand of the surety between theirs. And on that account it is said, it is not a briduw without two hands; it is not a surety without three hands; it is not an obligatory bargain without briduw, without surety: and since there was no briduw, and since there were not three hands, it is no bargain; and nothing is due to the claimant; and that he is not surety for any thing. a surety, the debtor alone can deny the surety; because the surety's was a loose word; and there ought not to be a raith for a loose word.

8. After the debtor shall have denied the surety, then the claimant rises up, and he questions the surety anew; and thus he questions him: 'Surety, thou hast acknowledged thy being a surety; and since thou hast acknowledged thy being a surety, thou oughtest either to pay, or to compel; because the law as to a surety is, when he shall acknowledge his suretiship, either to pay, or to compel.'

9. And then the surety is to say: 'I am not a debtor, that is, I am not a paying surety to thee; and thou hast not said that I was: if yonder man were a debtor to thee, I would use compulsion towards him; and since he is no debtor, neither am I a surety; and as he is not a debtor, and I am not a surety, I am neither to pay nor compel.'

10. 'Although the debtor might deny my debt, and that thou wert a surety for him, thou hast acknowledged being surety to me; know thou then who gave thee; as I am not to seek a denial beyond a gwaesav, but the person who shall acknowledge what is mine is to satisfy me; for there is but one of these three things, denial, or acknowledgment, or detention; and, for these three, there are three others required, denial for denial, and payment for acknowledgment, and domination for detention: for every detention is robbery: and since the lord is to compel the reparation of every robbery, and since payment is due on confession, thou art to pay to me my property, since thou hast confessed.'

11. 'I have not acknowledged being a debtor; and thou hast not made a claim upon me by debtorship: another debtor hast thou claimed of, and thou hast said of me that I was a surety to thee; and although I said I was a surety, the debtor has denied it, saying, that I was not a surety; and the law has decided, that the denial of the debtor was more just than my charge against him; and so the debtor has established his denial: and since the debtor has denied me through justice and law, I am not a surety; and as I am neither a surety nor debtor, I am neither to pay nor to compel.'

And that suit is called the teithi of a surety.

12. If the claimant in the suit sue the debtor, and the debtor deny, and avouch that he has a surety ; then the judge is to ask the surety : ' Surety, art thou a surety ? ' If the surety say : ' The man yonder, whom I see denying, if he has not given me as a surety, then I am not a surety.'

13. If the debtor say : ' I gave him not, and I will deny that either a demand or a suretiship has yonder man upon me.'

14. If the claimant then say : ' I have, and I will prove it against thee, and enough along with me.'

15. Then let the surety testify to the removal of the claim from him ; and it being law for the claimant to choose his claim, whether upon the surety or upon the debtor ; and he choosing to sue the debtor, the claim was removed from him in that way : and so the surety is to be oathless and ⁴²suitless, and his suretiship acknowledged by him.

And so there is a termination to that pleading.

II. THERE IS ANOTHER SUIT OF SURETISHIP.

1. If there be surety for property to a person from another ; and the one say, that he is surety for much, and the other say for what may be less ; it is to be examined whether there was more property in the bargain at first, when the surety was given thereon, than there might then be in the dispute : and if the claimant and the debtor acknowledge its being so ; the debtor is to prove that that debt was paid, either by a surety, or through other persons against whom there shall be neither objection, nor doubt, except the amount he acknowledges ; and, unless he have such as can prove it, the claimant is to testify to so much as may be sufficient ; and thus he is to testify :

2. ' To the lord will I demonstrate, and to these honest men,' naming them, ' although yonder debtor,' by his name, ' acknowledges my claim and my due from him, to be as much as I have said, and the surety has acknowledged his being a surety ; what he says of part of that debt having been paid to me, I have a denial of, as the law shall best decide, so far as that nothing of that debt has been repaid to me. claim upon me; and I denying, and saying, that thou hast neither proof, nor knowledge of it; and where there shall be neither proof, nor knowledge, to interpose between me and my denial, that the law sees a denial more effectual than a charge. Thou dost charge against me the having paid me part of my debt in the first place; and my debt thou hast acknowledged to be due from thee first; and I testified to thy having acknowledged the claim to be of the amount that I first stated. And thou hast avouched by having paid me; and I have denied thy having paid me any thing; and thus thy charge is against me; and so the denial is to be on my part. If thou dost not persevere in the charge of having repaid me my property, it is not necessary for me to deny. Acknowledged by thee is my debt; and acknowledged is it by the surety of his being a surety; and, since thou art unable to prove the having paid me heretofore, thou art to pay this to me out of hand. And, therefore, if thou shalt persevere in the charge of having paid me, I have a denial ready; and, if thou dost not charge it, thou art to fulfil the whole; because the debt is acknowledged by thee completely: and denial and acknowledgment cannot accord in the same matter, and the same suit, in the mouth of the same person.'

where he may be obliged. And, therefore, unless the debtor be honest, the claimant will oblige the surety to be honest: and, therefore, the law says: be not quick-handed among a multitude; and take up no mischief not originating with thee; and take not the debt of another upon thee, without any thing being due from thee.

2. And, nevertheless, although he be a surety, no demand is to be made upon him until the debtor shall fail. The debtor ought not to fail whilst there shall be any thing in his possession to pay the claimant. If there be nothing he can pay, or that a surety can secure himself by, then he is called a nullity; and the surety is called a surety for a nullity: and there are two laws for a surety to have recourse to in that case, one of the country, and one out of the country.

3. If the debtor be in a border-country, and have no property; then there is to be pleading between the claimant and the debtor.

4. The claimant is to say: 'Debtor, property is due to me from thee,' and naming the debtor, and describing the property due, and its term and time stipulated, 'and thou canst not deny it, for there is surety to me thereon; and it is my entreaty, and on behalf of my lord I ask it, that thou pay me mine; since there can be nothing urged against me respecting it.'

5. The answer of the other: 'I do not deny thy debt, nor thy claim, nor thy demand; I avouch, however, that I am a nullity, and unable, and failing; and where the ability shall fail, the law fails: the law was, for me to owe to thee, if I had any thing; and the law was not for me to owe to thee any thing, unless I had something; and since I have nothing, then thou art to have nothing of me until I have something.'

6. 'I see that thou dost acknowledge my claim; and that thou dost refuse paying; and, therefore, I demand of the surety, on behalf of my lord, to make good the suretiship for which he became engaged, by paying, or pledging, or compelling, either from what is his own, or from the property of the debtor for whom he became bound.'

7. Then the surety is to beseech the debtor, for his lord's sake, to free him from his suretiship.

8. Then the debtor says: 'I am ready to release thee from thy suretiship, in the manner the law may decide best for me to be able to do so; since the law requires of no one beyond his ability, and I have no ability; and I am no evader, nor am I a fugitive to an unconnected country, to avoid that claim: and, if thou doubttest this of me, I will give surety for paying thy demand when I am able.'

9. And, if the claimant accept the surety, let the first surety testify to surety being accepted anew, and the removal of the claim from him: and let him say, he has paid who has given surety; and since he has given surety last, is he not then released from the first suretiship?

And that is the third case.

IV. [OF OBJECTION BEFORE THE TIME.]

1. There are three things by which a person may lose his cause, however good may be his matter in justice and law: those three are, objection before the time; and testimony against a surety; and keeping after rejecting. And, if there be pleadings as to those three, they are to be in this manner.

2. If a person object before the time, let the other testify against him of his having objected before the time, thereby losing his suit. And let him say: 'He lost not the suit by objecting before judgment; and he did not lose it because he was to object before judgment; and that it was no use for him to object after judgment: claim and answer are to be; and mutual objecting, and mutual testifying, in justice and law; and whosoever shall object, it is then he must object; and then I objected; and after the pleading is judgment; and, therefore, objection avails not after judgment.'

3. The answer of the other is: 'It is established in the law, that whosoever shall object out of time, loses his time, and thou hast not objected in time; the time to object to a witness is, when a witness shall bear his testimony, and not when it shall be said that he is a witness; when I said he was a witness, then thou didst object to him; and although I might say he was a witness, thou knewest not whether he was a witness or not; and since thou knewest not, then thou oughtest not to find fault with him, nor to object to him, until thou knewest; and since thou oughtest neither to find fault with him, nor to object to him, he deserves not law, who does not conform to it: and since thou hast not conformed, I appeal to the law, of thy having lost thy cause.'

V. THIS IS OF TESTIMONY AGAINST A SURETY.

1. If there be claim and answer as to surety and debtor; and the surety deny; and the claimant say: 'I have with me such as know of thy being a surety.' Let the surety testify to his having brought testimony against him; and that it is one of three things, for which a person may lose his cause and his claim, however good may be its matter, because there is an established raith for a surety to deny his suretiship, in law: 'and, since thou hast relinquished thy raith, that was established for thee in the law, thou art not to have law: since he is not entitled to law, who does not conform to it: and from thence it has failed thee.'

2. And the second case is this: 'I am one tongue urging, and thou art another denying; and lest there should be a denial on thy part, I brought testimony against thee: for it is established in the law, that in the case where there shall be only one tongue urging, and another denying, that the denier is to have his denial, unless there be such as shall know; and lest it should be denied by 'him, I brought testimony; and, therefore, I am not to lose my cause, but gain it; since there are those who know of my being entitled to it.'

3. The surety is to answer: 'Thou hast not said I was a debtor, nor owing any property; if thou hadst so said, it was necessary for thee to prove it. Thou hast said I was a surety; and I have greater privilege than 'a debtor, and a raith established in the law; and, therefore, 'since thou hast proceeded against me,' in opposition to what is established in the law, thou art not to gain, by law, but to lose; since thou hast relinquished thy law: and he is not entitled to law, who does not conform to it.'

VI. THIS IS OF KEEPING AFTER REJECTING.

1. If a person agree with another to pay a debt which he shall owe, and the claimant reject the time, and the debtor offer him the time, and the claimant keep the time after first rejecting it: if the claimant claim, thus he claims:

And, if thou doubt-est it, I will prove it against thee ; and, if thou shalt deny it, I will prevent thee, by interposing between thee and thy denial, as far as the law will best suffer it.'

VIII. [A PLEADING AS TO A SHEEP.]

1. If a person sell a sheep to another person, and he who shall sell it give to him who shall buy it, a surety of the sheep's having milk and lamb at the time when she ought first to yean, by law, and the sheep should yean two lambs ; then there might be pleading between the claimant and the debtor. Now, this would be his claim :

2. ' Thou,' according to his name, ' I sold a sheep to thee, with a surety to thee of milk and lamb, in the season when first, by law, such should occur ; another lamb thou hast gotten, which I gave not to thee, and which I sold not ; and thou hast neither surety nor witness for it ; nor hast thou either right or claim to it ; nor is there aught come to me for it, and I the true owner of it, and thou not being its owner ; I appeal to the law, which is most right, whether the owner should have the possession of that for which there has been no prid, nor worth, nor gift, nor loan ; or that one who is not the owner should have possession of property for which he has neither lawful warrant nor arddelw.'

3. The arddelw of the defendant is : ' Thou soldest to me a sheep, with surety of having milk and lamb, at the time I ought to expect it from her ; the lamb, which thou claimest of me, thou hadst neither possession nor use thereof ; it never was born, nor reared, as thine ; while mine it was born, and was reared. And, if as theft thou dost claim it, I appeal to the law, that, as to birth and rearing, there cannot be a charge of theft supported. If as surreption thou claimest it, I appeal to the law, that there is no surreption in a thing not taken from the possession of another ; and that has not been in thy possession. If as lost thou claimest, I appeal to the law, that thou art not to claim the thing thou hast not lost ; and, if thou sayest that thou lost it, I shall plead cus-

And so the pleading terminates : and, in the judgment book there is the decision which is to take place on this pleading.

IX. HERE IS ANOTHER PLEADING.

1. Whoever shall sell a gravid sow to another, and the person who shall buy her give surety for twenty pence for every pig that the sow may farrow, and the sow should abort ; then the person who might sell the sow would become a claimant against him who might buy her. And this is the claim he sets up :

2. ' I sold to thee a gravid sow, with surety to me for twenty pence for every pig the sow might farrow, and the sow farrowed twelve pigs ; and since she has farrowed twelve, I am to have twenty pence for each pig ; and, if thou ownest it, thou oughtest to pay ; and, if thou deniest and doubtest it, I will prove it by an indifferent surety present, who can neither be objected to nor doubted.'

3. The answer of the defendant is : ' Twenty pence thou hast claimed of me, for every pig which the sow might farrow ; the sow has not as yet farrowed any pigs : for completeness cannot be had from incompleteness : they are incomplete as to the principal thing, and that is their lives ; for, what are not born with life cannot be pigs ; and, since they are not pigs, I appeal to the law, whether thou art entitled to aught from me, as they are not pigs.'

4. The other : ' A complete sow I sold to thee, big with young ; and, if she be incomplete in aught, not while with me came the incompleteness ; complete she went from me to thee, and thou hast been a conservator thereof ; and for what shall be lost in thy keeping, and in thy conservancy, by thy wrong doing, and mismanagement, I appeal to the law, whether I am to suffer loss, since I have not been a conservator of it.'

score pence, if she have a filly ; and the mare foal both a colt and a filly : the man who shall sell the mare becomes a claimant against him who bought her. And thus he claims :

2. ' I am to have six score pence from thee, if the mare which I sold to thee should have a colt, and she has had a colt ; and since she has had a colt, and I had a surety upon six score pence if she should, it being a stipulated surety upon its own merit, and acknowledged on both sides ; I appeal to the law, that thou oughtest to pay me six score pence.'

3. The answer of the defendant is : ' Thou soldest to me a mare in foal ; and, if she had a filly, a surety to thee upon three score pence ; and, if thou dost acknowledge the surety, it is for him to declare whether it be true ; and where thou dost not deny my answer, and the surety shall not deny his suretyship, I appeal to the law, whether thou oughtest to proceed against my warrant and lawful arddelw ; and where thou oughtest not to proceed against me, ought the law to go against me ?'

4. ' I first claimed, and the claim I made was six score pence, if the mare should have a colt ; and it was a colt she had ; and since she had a colt, I am entitled to have six score pence. Thou hast made me an answer ; and, in thy answer, thou hast not denied my six score pence, but acknowledged three score pence, if it should be a filly. Since thou hast not proceeded against me, either as to the colt, or as to the filly ; I appeal to the law, that I am to have six score pence for the colt, and three score pence for the filly.'

5. In respect to this pleading, there is no decision in the judgment book ; and, since there is not, it is necessary to decide it here. And thus it is to be : the claim of six score pence, if it should be a colt, was not objected to by the debtor ; and, since he did not object to it, that claim is against him ; and although he acknowledged another due, the first due is more forcible, and a greater claim, than the lesser due, although acknowledged. And, therefore, the claimant is to have nothing for the filly, and for the colt he is.

cuted, although he shall be found upon church land, or sanctuary and church-yard, or with relics: he is not free unless found upon the king's way coming to reconciliation with him for the deed for which he was banished; and it is free for the king to take right from him for the wrong he did to him. And as to the detention, neither church, nor relics are to protect him, because he forswore the lord's territory by God and the relics, and that in public court, and was food-forbidden in court and in church; and afterwards he entered the lord's territory without the leave of lord, or church; and, by so doing, he perjured himself; and whoever shall once publicly perjure himself, is not to be protected by church or relics, if overtaken before reconciliation with them. And thence it is said: he shall not be respected who does not respect: as he respected not the relics, the relics are not to be respected on him.

2. According to the law of Howel, the testimony of a husband is not to be credited as to a wife, nor that of a wife as to a husband; for, as every wife has a third with her husband, she is not to be credited as to him: for the third is not to be credited against the two parts.

3. The law of Howel is, whoever shall offer property to a lord for law as to land and soil, is, although he shall lose the land, to pay the property he promised to the lord: Bledyn, however, caused the payment to be made by the one who should have the land; and we mostly do thus at present. However, the alteration by Bledyn was not a law, but a good regulation; for there is but one law, according to the Cymry, for causes, to wit, that of Howel.

4. If a person say that there are two laws, the law of Howel, and the law of Bledyn, and call for one of them, and the judge adjudge according to the other; he can give his pledge against the judge as judging wrong, since he named the law, and he adjudged according to the other.

5. Whoever shall pledge a pledge with another: the person, to whom it is pledged, is only to take it in his hand and place it on his shoulder, and thence put it in the place where it shall be kept: and those are called the three stays of a pledge. And, if he do more than that, he is to lose the pledge, and what it may be for, unless contract allow him: for contract breaks regulation.

6. If a surety pledge a pledge for a debtor, it is not to be forfeited until the end of a year and a day, unless contract allow it; and thence it is to be redeemed by its worth and a third. And no one is to

13. Justice and law are not to be without four essentials: a common lord; a presiding judge; and two parties present. And, if law take place, the judge is to require the apparitor to proclaim protection on the field that nobody break silence: whoever shall break silence incurs a camlwrw of nine score pence according to the men of Powys. And pledges from each party of living men until claim and answer be concluded between the two parties.

14. And the lord is to sit with his back to the sun or wind, lest he be incommoded by the sun if powerful, or by the wind if high. And the judge is to sit before the lord, so that he may hear and see each of the two parties to the suit. And the defending party is to sit on the lord's right hand, and the claiming party on the left: because the right is to support, and the left to claim.

15. And the judge asks: 'Where thy tongue: where thy guider.' 'Where thy tongue: where thy guider.' And then the judge says, mutually speak. And then the claimant states his claim in four ways: which are, to name what he shall claim; and what way he shall claim; and in what manner he shall claim; and what amount he shall claim.

16. And the defendant answers by one of three ways: denial; or confession; or lawful arddelw: if there be a lawful arddelw, there is no need of denial, or confession. And while the answer shall be given, the apparitor is to stand opposite to the lord. And on his right side there is to be a way for the judges to go to the judgment seat.

19. And then the judge sends two of his companions to the party who shall produce testimony against the other, and they ask: 'What hast thou testified, and in what manner?' And then that party are to name the witnesses and the testimony. And the other party are not to object to the witnesses, for they do not yet make use of them, although they be named by that party as witnesses, and they acknowledge them to be witnesses; and, therefore, that is called, objecting to a witness before the time; and the one who shall so object is to lose his suit. Unless he then object, the interrogators are to return to the judge to state what had been told them. And a second time the interrogators are to go to ask the witnesses if they be witnesses to give their testimony; and then they are to be proceeded against if possible. They may be objected to for land-feud; for woman-feud; and for galanas-feud. The word of a man of Gwynedd is not to be credited against the word of a man of Powys, nor that of a man of Powys against a man of Gwynedd, nor that of a man of South Wales against a man of Powys or Gwynedd: for there are those three unconnected countries in Cymru. And as there is frequent discord between them, a man of either of them is not to be credited against a man of the other: nor is one excommunicated by name to be credited against a christian; nor a confessed thief, nor one food-forbidden in court and in church to be credited against a peaceable man; nor is a married priest, as he has relinquished his law, to be credited in law.

20. And when the first witness shall give his testimony, the one opposed to him shall say: 'Although thou sayest on thy loose word, thou wilt not carry it to the extremity.' And if the witness keep silent, then he is to testify, that he does not carry to the extremity what he said on his loose word, and his loose word is not to be credited. If the witness say, 'I will bear it as law shall best adjudge;' he is to take a relic, and require him to swear to the relic that what he says is true. And if he swear to the relic before to God, then he is to testify against him that he swore to the small before the great, and that his oath is no oath, and that he is not a witness according to law. If he swear to God first, and afterwards to the relic; he is to swear to the relic that he has perjured himself, and that his testimony is wrong; and likewise say, that he would object to him, for one of the causes mentioned before.

LAWS, II.

21. Objection to a witness before the time; and pleading after judgment; are the destruction of two regulations: because through them a man loses his suit.

22. It is good to find a man as not expected, and it is bad to find a man as not expected; it is so said, because, if a man be expected to be unwise and found wise, it is good to find a man as not expected; if a man be expected to be wise and found unwise, it is bad to find a man as not expected; for, as he was expected to be wise, it is bad to find him unwise. And those are called branches of wisdom.

23. Lineage prevents not failure; wisdom prevents not sin; poverty prevents not plenty; riches prevent not knowledge; shame prevents not love: it is so said, because, whatever may be a man's lineage, if he be sick, he will fail as before. He likewise counsels the wise: consider thy word before saying it; and think of thy deed before doing it; if thou wilt keep thy face, keep thy tongue; if thou wilt keep thy property, keep thy fist. And whoever shall keep those branches well, and the established law pertaining to them, is worthy to be heard; for they are two things, wisdom and law together; and, therefore, it is said: nobody is a judge through learning; although a person may always learn, he will not be a judge unless there be wisdom in his heart; however wise a person may be, he will not be a judge unless there be learning with the wisdom. For the judges say, that there are three pleadings in law: and one of them is called, a suit of surety and debtor; and that, if the most practised and greatest in the law were to study it from his youth to his old age, an interrogation might chance to him that he never before heard of, such a case as might be necessary for him to decide by wisdom, as not being in the law; and, therefore, wisdom is superior to learning, for wisdom is innate, and learning is adventitious and acquired from another.

24. If a person walk along a road with a woman, and she willingly turn from the road along with the man, and he have connexion with her willingly; and she afterwards come to dwellings, and complain to her lord and her kindred, and ask gwyneberth from him, although it took place without violence, without rape, without cry, without scream, and, by her confession, willingly; she is to have gwyneberth, to wit, a penny as broad as her buttocks.

25. If there be a suit as to land and soil between two persons, and one be adjudged to meer to the other; he is to bring relics, and the owner who swears, is to swear at the end of every nine paces he shall walk, and that with his feet on his own meer: and so from the place he shall begin meer-ing unto the place where he shall conclude. And those are called the nine paces of meer.

26. If galanas be imposed upon a murderer and kindred, and it be legally shared, and an exactor come to exact a share of the galanas from a male or a female relative to him, and that person be a vagabond in another country, or a destitute countryman, so as not to be able to pay the share imposed upon him; then it is right for the exactor to pay that share from his own property. And when his relative comes to the country, if he have property, let him exact from him as much as he paid for him. And that is the only case where a person is to exact property from himself without either surety, or witness, to it, only the testimony of the galanna.

27. If the son deny his father's suretiship, no one of the kindred of the mother of the son is to deny the suretiship of the father, but two men of the kindred of his father's mother; for the father, who became surety in the suretiship, is claimed and denied.

28. If there be an acknowledged surety for a debt, and the surety undoubted, and the defendant saying, that he is surety for less than the surety say; there the defendant is to pay only what he acknowledged; and as the surety acknowledged the amount stated by the claimant, if he have wherewith to exact let him exact, if not, let him pay himself what he confessed he was surety for to the claimant: if the surety acknowledge less than the two statements, let the defendant pay what he himself confessed; as the surety did not acknowledge either of the two other statements.

29. If there be an acknowledged debt with two sureties for it, and the claimant say, it is for three score of silver, and the defendant say, it is for one score, and that be left to the sureties; and the one return the highest statement, and the other the least; the law there says, as neither of the sureties acknowledged more than the largest statement, the largest amount is due.

30. If a person become a surety, and before the termination of his suretiship become a puritan, or monk, or of such profession, that he may not answer it; the law says, that he is to fulfil, while alive, what he promised: and that is one of the cases where a son is not to stand in his father's place; because his father left none of the property to him, he is not there to stand in his father's place, but let the church stand.

31. Evidences are not to be brought as to galanas, nor saraad, nor blood, nor wound, nor ferocious acts, nor waylaying, nor burning buildings, nor theft, nor surety, nor open assault, nor adultery, nor violence, nor in a case where guardians should be, nor in a case where an established raith is appointed by law: because evidences are not to extinguish a raith.

32. Upon whomsoever the court meer shall abut in his lord's own territory, if there be mutual meering, the court meers; for, from it, its privilege arises to every land; where the bounds of a lord's court and a bishoprick should meet, the mother church meers; when there shall be mutual meering between a lord's court and other land, the maer and the canghell-or are to ascertain the meer and to swear to it when necessary; when a trev shall bound upon another, the highest in privilege is to meer to the lowest, that is, freedom meers to geld.

34. Parents are to place a son under the hand of a priest when he shall be seven years of age, and then he can commit and receive saraad; and at the end of fourteen years he is to become a lord's man; at the age of twenty-one he is to take land from his lord, and do military service for him, and pay daered to him thenceforth as another man; and he is not adjudged to the duel until he shall be one and twenty; and the law does not adjudge any one to the duel after sixty-three. Twins are to have one share of patrimony; and instead of one man to come to the duel; and, if they prosecute, they prosecute as one man.

35. There are three innocent boneddigs for whom there is neither saraad, nor galanas: one is, a person killed by an animal; and a person killed by a mad dog; and a person killed by a falling tree after warning.

THESE ARE THE SEVERAL WAYS BY WHICH A PERSON MAY BE DEPRIVED OF HIS PROPERTY, AND WHICH IT WILL BE MEET FOR HIM TO CLAIM LEGALLY: THEFT; VIOLENCE; SUR-REPTION; LOAN; PLEDGE; BORROWING; HIRE; EXCHANGE; NEGLIGENCE; IMPOUNDING; AND ILLEGAL REMOVAL.

I. THUS PROSECUTION FOR THEFT IS TO BE TREATED.

1. There are two kinds of theft: theft of what has increase; and theft of what has not increase.

2. If it be theft of what has increase, it is to be sworn to; excepting the three things to which the law allows no swearing: meal; bees; and money: and, for those three, there is to be a prosecution;
if in a vessel, they are to be sworn to.

3. The first thing that should take place is, to object to the judge, if one of the parties shall will it: for it is before the arrangement of the parties the objection is to be made; and, if not then objected to, it cannot be done afterwards.

4. Three ways may a judge be objected to.

5. After the objection to the judge has been settled, and the lord has laid the law between them, then the thief, on coming into court, ought to call for an advocate, and to say he is innocent, with a legal arddelw.

6. Then the plaintiff himself is to say, that a thief is not entitled to an advocate, whilst there is a charge of theft against him, for which he is liable to lose a limb, or his life; for, unavailing is what any one, excepting himself, may say in his behalf, before he becomes bound in law. And thereupon the judge must decide, that he is not to have an advocate, for a suit whereby he may lose a limb, or his life: but, there are three persons, who are entitled to an advocate: a woman; a foreigner ignorant of the language; and one of imperfect utterance.

7. Then the judge is to arrange the parties legally, as it is right for them to be, arranging the party of the plaintiff in the first place; and thus the arrangement is to proceed: the lord is to sit with his back to the sun or to the weather, with two impartial elders, one on each side of him, and a gwrda on each side of the elders, and those are lawful and unobjectionable witnesses; and the judge of the court sitting before the lord, with the judge of the cymwd on one side of him, and the priest on the other side; and the party of the plaintiff on the left side of the judge; and the party of the defendant on the right side of him; and the two apparitors standing above the two parties, lest anybody should break silence.

8. Then the judge is to ask the plaintiff: 'Whom dost thou sue?' And then he is to name him. And then the judge is to ask him: 'Art thou prepared to sue him, as the law shall decide?' And then let him say: 'I am.' Then let the judge ask the defendant: 'Art thou ready to answer, as the law shall decide?' And then let him also say: 'I am.' Then let the judge ask the lord: 'Dost thou place the law between them?' And then let him also say: 'I do.'

9. Then let the judge show to the parties their stations. And then let the judge ask the plaintiff: 'Who is thy pleader, and who thy guider?' If it be a cause wherein there ought to be a pleader and a guider: that is to say, for land, or a horse, or a bullock, or three score pence of money or that may be more.

10. The judge is not to obstruct any person's party, unless he obstruct the other party. And a pleader and guider cannot be allowed in a suit for less than as aforesaid.

11. Then let the plaintiff say who is his pleader, and who his guider. And then let the judge ask: 'Wilt thou abide loss and gain by their words?' And then let him say: 'I will.' After that, let the judge ask: 'Will ye take upon ye loss and gain by your own words?' And then they are to say: 'We will so take it, for

12. Then let the judge ask the defendant: 'Who is thy pleader, and who thy guider?' And then let him say who is his pleader, and who his guider; and let him point them out. And then let the judge ask: 'Wilt thou abide loss and gain by their words?' And then let him say: 'I will, this day, for myself, and for my matter.' And then let the judge ask: 'Will ye take upon ye loss and gain by your words?' And then let them say: 'We will so take it, during the present day.'

13. Thereupon, let the apparitor proclaim that no one break silence, except the parties to whom the law allows liberty to speak; and then let the judge announce the punishment for breach of silence: that is to say, a camlwrw of three kine, or nine score of silver; and the word spoken to be unavailing to him, as well as to the person in whose behalf it may be spoken. If, however, one of the parties shall speak after him, the word shall not be unavailing to him from his own mouth afterwards.

14. Then the judge is to address the parties: 'Speak ye now on both sides.' Then it is right that the plaintiff should have a relic; and let him take the relic in his right hand, having his left hand upon the right ear of the animal, if it be an animal; if it be not an animal, let him place the hand wherever he willeth thereon, and let him swear on the relic that is in his hand, that no one was owner of this property, but he and his lord, and his wedded wife, if he have one, when it was taken by theft from him; and that nothing separated it from him, excepting theft; and let him name the day in such and such a week, in such and such a month, in such and such a season of the year; and let him so swear the second time, and the third time; and it is not necessary for him to name the thief.

15. It is necessary for the person, in whose hand the property may be, to answer concerning it; that is, he must give one of the three answers: whether as a guardian, having custody by birth and rearing; or custody before loss; or an arddelw that will take it from his hand.

the time, and take it from his hand, let him be free; and let that person be asked for his arddelw; and, if it be necessary for him to have time to produce his arddelw, he is to have time, like the other; and, if he produce his arddelw, let him also be free; and, if the third hand produce an arddelw in the field, he shall be entitled to it: but there is no time for producing an arddelw after the third hand onward; any arddelw that shall be found in the field, however, is to be allowed; only, no arddelw is to be allowed that cannot perform penance for his deed; that is to say, men who are in church orders, and men without appointed time to answer. Swearing is always to take place against each party, as mentioned above.

17. It is not necessary for any one to deny theft, together with an arddelw for the property in hand; for his denial is his arddelw.

18. If as to custody from birth and rearing he avouches; then the judge is to ask: 'Who are thy guardians, and where are they?' And then he is to name his guardians, and the place where they are; and he is entitled to time, according to where his guardians shall be; and let him name a number, and let him say: 'That is sufficient, and also more if necessary.' And after he shall have said that, although he may fail as to the first list, he may produce another list; only that he shall not have time for the second list; and, if they be in the field, then he is to point them out, and name them, and bring them to him.

19. And, in the first place, let him give his own oath, to seeing its rearing, and knowing its birth, as his own property, and that nothing ever separated it from him; and, unless he makes his oath, nothing avails him. Afterwards, let the first he named be first sworn; and let him swear to knowing of its birth, and seeing its rearing, in the possession of the man, naming him, and that it was never separated from him. And those guardians are to be of the same privilege with himself. In like manner, let the second swear. And, if they do not so swear, he shall be condemned. himself. There is no disrespectability, but by being an alltud: and by being the three persons whose word is not truth, whatever they may say: a religious who breaks his vow; a witness who gives false testimony; an arrant coward; a person not of age to answer; and a wife; for such as those cannot be guardians; and a blind person also, as he cannot see what he has to keep.

20. If as being in an alltud state the plaintiff seek to render guardians disrespectful, this is the way he is to proceed: after a guardian has sworn what he has to swear, then the plaintiff, or his advocate, or his guider for him, is to say: 'Thou art an alltud; and, if thou deniest it, there are for me enough who know that of thee; and to the law I appeal, that the word of an alltud is not to be taken against a Cymro.' Then it is right for the guardian, or the advocate for him, to give one of three answers: arddelw of privilege; or a denial of an alltud state; or an appeal to the law, that he is to name to whom he says that he is an alltud: and likewise to deny an alltud state.

21. If he avouch himself to have privilege, let him say, that he is privileged, having enough of guardians to maintain him in his privilege; and those guardians are 'not to' have time granted them, if they be not in the field.

22. Then the plaintiff is to appeal to the law, that he must describe his privilege that he maintains; and, if the privilege he describes be not in his possession, let the plaintiff appeal to the lord, to pronounce that such a privilege is not in his possession; and let him appeal to the law, that an empty hand keeps nothing.

23. If the lord fail to support him, his defence has failed him: for there is no privilege, without an investiture from the lord.

24. If the guardians fail, he has likewise failed, and he cannot be a guardian; and in the same manner those guardians are rendered disrespectful, as the first that have been mentioned.

25. If the guardian avouch by denying an alltud state without any thing else, it is right to hear the proof of the plaintiff, if his evidences be in the field; if they be not, no time is to be granted for them. And if the guardian be minded to object to those evidences, he is to object to them thus: after the first evidences shall have sworn to knowing and seeing the alltud state, as a guardian ought to swear; then the alltud is to say: 'I have a lawful objection against thee, so that thy word is not to be taken against me; if thou deniest that, I have enough who know it.' If the witness of the plaintiff deny that, or his advocate for him, let the evidences of the guardian be made use of. If the witness of the plaintiff, or his advocate for him, appeal to the law, that he is to name the objection, then he is to name the objection; and it is not necessary to deny an objection, until it be named. Unsatisfied galanas-feud, and land-feud not settled, are legal objections; and the galanas-feud, and the land-feud, are to be named: and, if the lord declare that each has been settled, it is not an objection: and woman-feud is the third; and that, likewise, it is necessary to name; and it is not an objection, unless the woman be forcibly taken; and that he be cohabiting with the woman, whilst the law is in progress.

26. And so the evidences of every one successively against another must be taken, until one shall fail. And the one whose evidences may fail him shall be cast, in the contention concerning the guardians. And after it shall have been determined as to that guardian, another is to be taken, who is to be scrutinized like the other; and so from one to one, unto the last: and the party whose guardians fail him, is to be cast.

27. So in a case where two unobjectionable evidences, or two witnesses, or two guardians, are had, those two are enough; unless this happen: if a person promise a number, without saying, enough besides; if one fail, the whole will have failed; and the law may continue between them from one term to another; but it cannot continue longer than that, for any one to bring forward evidences. And should the law continue so long as that, without one being cast, the plaintiff shall be cast.

28. And whosoever shall object to a witness, or an evidence, before knowing what he may say, and swearing to what he may say, no objection can be made to him that day.

the person is an alltud, and the alltud state be denied, that is right; and if that man be in the field, and deny his being an alltud to him, the evidences of the plaintiff are then unavailing: for no one is to attribute property to a person, where he himself shall reject it; and, unless he be in the field, no time is allowed for him: and although he may say, a denial shall not be brought forward by the guardian, or proof by the plaintiff, until there be an arddelw brought on the part of the man, to his not being an alltud to him, and failing him.

30. If the plaintiff be minded to render a guardian incompetent; and say, that he is one of the three persons whose word is not to be taken, he must proceed thus: after he shall be named, and pointed out, before it shall be known what he may say, the plaintiff is to say: 'Thy word is of no effect against me, nor against any one, whatsoever thou mayest say, either evil or good;' and then he is to name one of three cases; 'and if thou deniest, there are for me enough who know it.' Then the guardian is to say: 'A thorough denial against thee, and against thy knowledge.' Then the judge is to ask the plaintiff: 'Who are thy evidences, and where are they?' But they are not entitled to time, if they be not in the field; if they be in the field, they must be named, and pointed out. And, if he charge the guardian with being a coward, the evidence is to swear to knowing and to seeing him refuse his lord and his party, to go in the service of his lord, along with his lord and his companions, 'three times. And he can object to those, as we have mentioned above.

31. If he make a charge against him of breaking his vow, it is necessary for the evidences to swear to knowing and to seeing him making his vow, and breaking it. And he can object to them, like the former ones.

32. If for false testimony, let the evidences swear to knowing and to seeing him bearing false testimony; and doing penance on account thereof. If he be minded to object to them, let him object as in the case of those before.

shall be done, the plaintiff ought to have a relic; and, unless he have, let him lose his cause. If there be a relic, let him swear on the relic that is in his hand, to the taking of the property by stealth; and let him name the thief, and the property, and the time of his losing the property. Then the defendant is to deny, on the relic, the whole of what has been charged against him. If he deny not on the relic, the theft is acknowledged.

2. If he deny, a raith is necessary for him, according to the magnitude of the theft. For a sow, and a sheep, and a backburden, the oaths of five persons nearest to him in worth: and those are to be, the two persons nearest of kin to him of his father's kindred, and the nearest to obtain his worth if killed; and the nearest for him also to obtain their worth; and the two nearest of his mother's kindred; and he himself the fifth.

3. For a horse load, and an ox, and three score of silver, the oaths of seven persons, nearest in worth, like the others; excepting that two thirds of them must be of the kindred of the father: and so every raith, but that five persons cannot be divided into thirds.

4. And, in like manner, as to every property, from three score pence to six score; for six score, and from six score unto one pound, the oaths of ten persons, the nearest in worth; for one pound, and from one pound onward, the oaths of twenty-four persons, the nearest in worth to him.

5. A raith goes no further than that, to rebut a prosecution, unless there be a legal view concomitant with the prosecution: a legal view is, a person who shall swear to seeing the thief, with the theft in his possession, travelling through the country in open daylight; and swearing that before the law. Then it is required of the defendant to produce the oaths of thirty-three of the men nearest in worth to him.

6. There is to be no denial against a competent declaration. A legal competent declaration is, the oath of a devotee, over a relic, swearing to seeing the thief, in open daylight, the sun being risen, with the theft in his possession. A devotee is a priest; and that in a case between two persons of his parish: for he is one of the nine tavodiogs.

7. A married woman cannot be an accuser: but a married woman can prosecute for the taking her property, like another person.

8. If a person be minded to guard a guest against a charge for theft, it is during the night he is to guard a guest, and not for theft in the day-time. In this manner is a guest to be guarded: the oath of the defendant, and two along with him of the persons of the house in which he was sleeping; swearing to their being guardians for him, during that night, from the time of twilight until the following morning, and passing the hand over him thrice during that night. And, in the manner described above for the others, these can also be proceeded against.

9. The oath of an absolver as to theft is not to be refused, wheresoever it shall be demanded. And if there be a refusal, and it can be proved, satisfaction is to be made for the theft: it is to be proved by an evidence, and it is to be rebutted by other evidences, in the manner you have heard of above. The oath of 'an absolver,' in respect to other property, is not an obstacle to a person who shall not take it, until the law shall require him to take it. This is the oath of an absolver: the loser coming with a relic to the person whom he may suspect: 'Swear to God, and on this relic, that thou hast not taken my property:' and let him describe the property he has lost.

III. THESE ARE THE PUNISHMENTS FOR THEFT.

1. For less than one penny, three pounds. If the thief cannot pay, he is to be banished. If he be found, after that, in the country beyond the set time that he can first quit the lord's land, 'seven pounds are due to him; and, if he have not surety for that, to be banished a second time: for he is not to be received in a country who shall not do justice. If he be found in the country the third time, he is to be put to death.

2. From one penny unto sixpence, seven pounds. If he have not surety for that, he is to be banished. If he be found in the country afterwards, he is to be put to death.

3. In three ways is a person to be put to death for theft: by his own confession; by the failure of his arddelw; and by his being caught in his flight: if he deny his flight, it is thus to be proved: the oath of the captor, to having been for three nights seeking him at his home, and, after that, of finding him, and catching him fleeing, and against his will.

4. The captor is not to be objected to; but one captor is not sufficient: for the word of one person is not effective in any case, except of the nine tavodiogs.

5. For failure of raith for theft three pounds are to be paid.

6. Nine score pence is to be paid for a dog, a bird, and a wild beast, should they be killed: and the oath of one person denies them.

7. Hanging and spoliation are not both to be inflicted upon any one, but upon him who will not devise his property; or from finding two diverse thefts in his possession: then he should be despoiled for the one, and hanged for the other.

8. A thief is not to be put to death, given upon golvodogaeth, but sold; if he will not buy himself, and having the means, let him be hanged.

9. A thief is not to be hanged, if one of his beasts be killed in the court before his trial, but to be set at large; and let the person by whom it is killed answer to the lord, as to his thief.

10. The house of a thief is not to be a halog-dy, if the thief be found; and should he not be found, it shall not be so, excepting as to his own property.

11. The dirwy of a bondman, for his first theft, is six score pence; for the second, one pound; for the third, he is to have a limb cut off: and such a one is deemed a notorious thief.

12. Three things rank the same as theft in hand: finding it on his back or casting it from him; or finding it under the same roof and the same lock as him; or finding him driving it before him.

13. If a person lose indivisible property, such as a bullock, and find part to swear to, the whole is to be had.

14. Hanging is to be inflicted for theft; and burning for a ferocious act.

15. If custody before loss be avouched by the defendant, let him swear with two men of like privilege with himself, that before the other had lost his property, he was owner of that property; and let him name the day when in his possession. gone from the first hand, since the party cannot make his oath that the property has not been separated from him. And there cannot be custody as to birth and rearing of a thing in which there never has been life.

17. The oath of one man is enough to deny liberating a thief.

iv. AN ACTION FOR VIOLENCE IS TO BE THUS TREATED.

1. First, a plaint ²¹to the lord: because there ought to be a plaint, where there shall be a breach of law. After the lord shall have put the law in effect, and the parties have been bound, as has been described before, then the plaintiff is to have a relic in his hand; if the property be in the hand of the defendant, the plaintiff is then to swear to the property, word for word, in the manner that theft was sworn to, but naming violence.

2. And the defendant then is to avouch, by guardians, the birth and rearing; or custody before loss; or arddelw that will take it out of his hand: and he is entitled to time, as to each one of those, according to the place wherein they may be, if it be necessary for him.

3. And the ²²plaintiff then can proceed against them, and discredit them, like the guardians in respect to theft.

v. THUS VIOLENCE IN ABSENCE IS TO BE TREATED.

1. The plaintiff is to have a relic with him; and after the parties shall have been arranged, let the plaintiff take the relic, and let him swear on the relic to the taking of the property through violence by the man; and let him name the property, and the man, and what time he lost it.

2. Then let the defendant deny on the relic pointedly; and then let the judge adjudge the oaths of fifty men, of the men nearest to him in worth. Because law adjudges the men nearest in worth in every case, excepting where there shall be men under vows to deny murder.

3. Unless the plaintiff have a relic with him, let him lose his cause, with nine score pence to the lord.

4. If the defendant do not deny on the relic, let him pay three pounds to the lord, and his property to the plaintiff entirely;

VI. THUS SURREPTION IS TO BE TREATED.

1. First, plaint: and, after the lord shall have put the law in effect, the plaintiff is to have a relic in his hand; and if the property be in the field, then the plaintiff is to swear to it legally, as has been mentioned before; and let him name surreption.

2. Then the defendant is to avouch one of the three arddelws: custody before loss; birth and rearing; or an arddelw that will take it out of his hand: and he is entitled to time, if necessary, according to where they may be; and the plaintiff may discredit them, if he will, similar to the former cases. If his arddelw fail him, let him pay nine score pence to the lord, with all his property to the plaintiff. Should his arddelw succeed, let the complainant pay nine score pence to the lord.

3. If the surreption be absent, let the plaintiff take the relic in his hand, and let him swear to God, and on the relic that is in his hand, that the property was taken surreptitiously by the man; and let him name the property, and the man, and what time he lost it.

4. And then let the defendant deny on the relic; and thereupon let the judge require of him his oath, with that of two men nearest to him in worth; and that in a week from the succeeding Sunday, at the church where his sacramental bread and holy water shall be, and before the priest shall have put off his robe from about him, or distributed the bread. And it is at that time that every raith should be produced.

5. If the plaintiff swear not on the relic, let him lose his cause, with nine score pence to the lord.

6. If the defendant deny not on the relic, let him pay nine score pence to the lord, and his property to him who had lost it.

VII. THUS A LOAN IS TO BE TREATED.

property. If the plaintiff deny his having been cast, let the evidences of the defendant be made use of; and let the plaintiff object to them, as before directed. If the 'plaintiff' say: 'I appeal to the lord, who possesses the throne, and to the law, that there has never been a suit between me and thee as to this property; and that the lord has granted me to have law this day as to this property, and being bound in the law concerning it; and upon the law I rest my claim, in which thou hast bound thyself, that I ought to have right:' the law says, if the lord decide that there never has been a trial as to that property, that there ought to be an answer in the law wherein they are bound.

11. And if he acknowledge resting upon the law and his denial, the defendant is to be cast, and restore the property to him who had lost it.

3. And, in that manner, let each party object to the evidence of his opponent, as you have heard above.

4. And so as to every claim for which no fixed raith, or guardians, are admissible: and guardians are not admissible as to property, except in a case where swearing is admissible; and swearing is not admissible, except as to theft, and violence, and surreption; because there is a breach of law in those: and a raith is not admissible but against a lawful charge on the relic; and in respect to deposit none of those are admissible, but the claim is to be stated through evidences; since there is no settled raith as to a deposit, to deny the receipt of the property by him.

5. There is, however, in such a case as this: if the guardian acknowledge the delivery of the property to him, and say, that his house was broken into, and show the breach in the house, and that the property was taken from his possession, and his own property taken with the other property: then it is incumbent upon him to make his oath, and all the people of the house are to join with him, to his being clear as to that property. Should there not be a breach in the house, and there be a dispute between the guardian and the owner, as to some of the property; then the guardian is to swear, with one person nearest to him in worth, to his being clear of that property. And such raith is, lest there be illegality towards the lord.

6. And, notwithstanding all those oaths, let the guardian restore the property he shall acknowledge to have been delivered to him, unless the earth be removed, and the property taken under the earth; in that case the guardian ought not to restore it; for the lord is the owner of the earth; and the guardian is not to be responsible for it, but the lord.

IX. THUS BORROWING IS TO BE TREATED.

1. After the parties shall have been arranged, the plaintiff is to state his claim: 'If the defendant deny it, there are for me enough of witnesses to my having lent the property to thee.'

2. If the defendant deny that, let the witnesses of the plaintiff be made use of.

3. The oath of a witness is, to testify.

4. And the defendant can object to them in three ways: as having sworn public perjury in a case of theft; for galanas; for woman-feud: and that by evidences, which can be mutually objected to, as has been mentioned above.

5. If the defendant be minded to prove the restoring, he can do it, as explained above; excepting that property ²⁴'not ²⁵'present' cannot be proved to be restored: and swearing is not admissible as to property that shall be lent, although it be ²⁶'present': and it is not admissible for the other to keep it; since it is not admissible to keep, but in opposition to swearing.

X. THUS INTEREST IS TO BE TREATED.

1. The property to be forthcoming, when the appointed time arrives, with the interest, according to the contract, as the contract-witnesses shall determine, if there be any: if there be no contract-witnesses, there is but one tongue asserting, and another denying.

XIII. THUS IMPOUNDING IS TO BE TREATED.

1. Whosoever may impound, let him not confine a beast in any secret place, as in a house, or in a place where it may not be seen; and let him not conceal its being in his possession, if he intend to impound lawfully.

2. Should the owner be so furious about the beast that is impounded, as to prosecute for it as stolen, or as taken surreptitiously; let the other keep the beast as his own property.

3. Should a person complain of impounding beasts illegally, the taker is to swear to having overtaken the foremost and the hindmost ones on the corn lawfully: and his oath is more trustworthy than the complaint of the claimant; unless the impounding be in a secret place.

4. And a person is not to take beasts to be impounded from one trev to another.

XIV. THUS UNLAWFUL REMOVAL IS TO BE TREATED.

XV. OF TIME FOR ANSWERING.

1. Every defendant is entitled to time for answering the first day, if he demand time, before binding himself in law; but after binding himself he is not entitled.

2. There is no time for aid, but for arddelw, evidences, and guardians; and that for the first list.

XVI. AS TO STATING THE EXTENT OF A CLAIM.

1. Every defendant is entitled, if so minded, after the plaintiff shall have been bound, and before he is bound himself, to call for the declaration of the extent of his claim, and what law is depended upon; and after that the plaintiff shall not depart from such law, although he may wish it.

2. And afterwards, let the defendant go to take advice, and let the plaintiff remain in his bond; and then let the defendant also come and bind himself; and after that let them proceed with the trial.

3. In this manner the judge is to proceed, after he has bound the parties, and ordered silence in the field: ¹⁵'Now then speak ye mutually.' If they do not so speak, then let him desire it the second time; and if they do not then mutually speak, he is to ask the third time of the plaintiff: ¹⁶'Dost thou claim of yonder man?' If he do not then make a claim, the judge is to set the defendant free; for he is acknowledged to be freed.

4. If the other make a claim, then let the judge listen to the pleadings carefully, and suffer them mutually to speak, until he shall hear them speaking the same thing repeatedly; and then let him forbid them.

5. And thereupon let the judge publicly recapitulate the matters, as each one of them ¹⁷said; and then let the judge ask: ¹⁸'Do you will to amend?' If they be so minded, let them be allowed. Afterwards, let the judge declare the amendment; and let the judge ask them the second time, if they will to amend; and so the third time. If there be one party who shall will to amend, and the other do not will it; the party that shall will it is to be allowed to do so.

6. And after the judge shall have recapitulated all the pleadings on the bench, let him go out to decide: and none shall be allowed to go along with him, but the judges, and the priest; and an apparitor is to attend, lest any one ³of the two parties' should approach them; and then he is not to come to the judgment, but to remain at some distance from them; and the other apparitor to be guarding the bench, and ordering silence to the law, when it comes. If any one approach the judges, without permission, whilst they are judging, let him pay nine score pence to the lord. And the judge is to go no further from the place of pleadings to decide, than where he may hear what the advocates shall say as to the law.

7. After the judge has been seated on the judgment-seat, the priest is to pray and beseech God to show them the most righteous judgment, and every one is to chaunt his Paternoster and Ave Maria; and after the prayer, let the priest depart.

8. And then let the judge recapitulate all the pleadings; and, if it be necessary to interrogate either of the parties, let two be sent in to interrogate them; and this is the ⁴question that ought to be asked: if either of the parties have two expressions, such as evidences to prove, and testifying that he denied not; or an answer by the defendant, that he appealed to the law that he ought not to answer those persons, and that such as those should be put aside. And although it be said that the plaintiff is to ⁵'be first interrogated,' he is not, unless he be the first to use two expressions. And if the defendant be the first to use two answers, he is first to be interrogated. And if the parties, to whom the ⁶'interrogation shall be put, be minded to go to take counsel, let them obtain the permission of the judge to go to their consultation, and let the number of the party that are bound go to consult, without any more; and let them go only so far as the judge went from the bench.

chosen; then the judge is to put it to the choice of the principal of the party himself, which expression he may will. And if he choose testimony, let the ²⁷interrogators ask him, to whom he has testified; and then let him say: 'To the lord, and the judge, and the gwrdas.'

10. Then the judge is to ²⁸'come in,' and recapitulate all the pleadings, as far as to the witnesses; and then to take the statement of the witnesses, on the bench, publicly; and those witnesses cannot be objected to; because that, before the arrangement of the parties, the party of the lord has been established, and the gwrdas have been generally recognized.

11. If the gwrdas and the judge stand within hearing of the testimony, it is complete to him. If the judge hear not the testimony, unavailing is a testimony which a judge shall not hear on his judgment seat; and unless the gwrdas hear it, although heard by the judge, it is unavailing. If two of the gwrdas and one of the judges assert the hearing of the testimony, that is sufficient.

12. After the judge has come to the bench, and after he shall have recapitulated the pleadings, let him demand surety for his fee of each of the two parties. If there be a refusal, by either, to give surety, from supposing that he shall obtain a decision in his favour although he will not give a surety, let the judge decide it to the person who is compliant; since he is entitled to the decision, by the non-compliance of the other: for he is not entitled to law who will not conform to it.

13. If the judge delay his decision, let him delay it until the end of the ninth day.

14. If one of the parties be minded to put the judge to the relic, as to not knowing his decision, he is to give his ²⁹'oath that he does not know. If his oath be not demanded before his rising from his place, he is not to give it afterwards.

not knowing how to judge between them ; and let him lose his office, since he knows not how to officiate therein : and the cause is to be renewed before another judge.

17. If he then adjudge it on that day, and any one willeth to enter into mutual pledge with him, he ought to do so before the rising of the judge from his judgment seat : if he do not do it then, it is not necessary for the judge to take his pledge, unless he be so minded himself. A laic cannot mutually pledge with a judge when a judge has become a pleader. He cannot mutually pledge, but as to procuring a judge who shall pronounce a better decision than his.

18. Then the lord is to take their two pledges, and write the pleadings, and give them to the judge of the court, and appoint a time.

19. And then the judge of the court is to ask the person who gave the pledge against the judge, for procuring a judge who should pronounce a decision, which should be better than that of the other : 'Where is the judge whom thou hast spoken of procuring to pronounce the judgment ?' Thereupon he is to point out the judge. Then the judge of the court is to ask that judge : 'Where is the judgment which thou pronouncest, that is better than the other ?' Then he is to declare his judgment, and to give a pledge thereon. Then the judge of the court is to recapitulate the pleadings, as they had been on the former day, and were written.

20. Then the judge of the court is to go and judge between them ; and he that is condemned as wrong, let him pay his wynebwerth to the other ; and let him redeem his tongue from the lord ; and that he be never more a judge. His wynebwerth is equal to his saraad, excepting that wynebwerth is not augmented like saraad.

21. If there be no judge of the court, the lord is to appoint a ²⁵common judge.

22. There can be no mutual pledging with a judge of the court, as to the judgment he shall give between two that are pledged : as to any other judgment he may give, he can be mutually pledged with.

23. If a person give a pledge before the judge has pronounced his judgment, and shall not give it after the judgment, let him pay nine score pence to the lord, for giving an unlawful pledge.

24. There is to be no objection to a pleader, but for having ¹violated his religious profession, and quitting the world, or his becoming a separated leper.

25. A pleader, after he shall have bound himself, ought not to leave the place; if he do leave, let him lose his cause.

26. A pleader is not to lose his cause for approaching the judge, either sitting or standing.

27. The lord is not to quit his throne, when the judge goes out to give judgment; if he do leave, it is a vacant throne. The advocates may rise, if they will, and when the judge returns, take their places.

28. A plaint for saraad is not ⁴legal, if appearance be possible, but from one term to another. For other plaints there is a year and a day.

29. No one is to prefer a plaint to any court, but to the court which is to assert his right.

30. A plaint is no plaint that a person shall prefer for another, who is able to come himself, if he be under appointment to answer. Unless a person stand to the plaint, which another has preferred for him, let the person who complained forfeit nine score pence.

31. If a person testify against another as to an unperformed act; thus: 'I testify that thou hast not done;' or, 'I testify thou hast not said:' that is an unavailing testimony; for a testimony is not proper, except as to a word, or as to an act.

32. If a person testify before the defendant has answered, and the defendant imagine he is able to convict him, for ¹testifying before answering, he is not to be convicted, notwithstanding; but he shall not obtain any benefit on account of that testimony, it is unavailing; for there could be no ²breach in the mouth of the pleader. If the defendant be so foolish: 'Thou hast testified before answering, and thou hast lost thy cause,' and that he will not deny the claim. Let the plaintiff then say: 'I will now testify to the judge, and to the gwrda, that thou hast answered, and that there was no denial in thy answer; and to the law I appeal, although the first testimony might be unavailing, that this testimony is not unavailing; and that is truth.'

34. Four persons who may entertain plaints in a court lawfully: a maer; a canghellor; a land maer; and a porter.

35. What distinction is there between a claim; and a sur-claim; and a futile claim? A claim that a person shall make of another, and the other say: ' I will not do thee right as to that claim, until thou shalt do right to me as to this claim: ' such is a sur-claim, and is not to be answered, until the other be terminated. A futile claim is a claim that a person shall make, and shall afterwards leave for a year and a day unproceeded in; that is a futile claim, and is never required to be answered: and no claim is futile, however long unsued, unless it be commenced, and be afterwards unproceeded in for a year and a day, unagitated in court.

XVII. ³¹THUS A CROSS IS TO BE TREATED.

To be taken from a lord; for there is no cross but the one received from the hand of a lord, excepting one; and that is a cross, which a proprietor shall set up, lest another enjoy his patrimony, he not having time to go to procure a cross, lest the other establish a lawful possession of the land before his return; and after taking it, to complain of breaking it, if it be broken. And, as to that cross, only one shall escape a dirwy: if no complaint be made, each one will escape.

2. A cross absent is no cross.

3. A cross lasts only for a year.

4. The cross of a woman is no cross, ³²if she have a husband: neither is her plaint of effect, but for her saraad.

5. In this manner is a cross to be sued, and to be denied: a relic is to be taken by the party in his hand, and to swear on that relic thrice, to the breaking of the cross; and let the other deny upon the relic; and after that, let him give his oath, with the oath of two men nearest to himself in worth a week from the next Sunday, in the church wherein shall be his sacramental bread and his holy water.

10. Four of them are to have a space of nine days, to recollect themselves as to their oath; and the three others are not required to swear.

11. A lord, a judge, and a father, are not required to swear.

12. A priest is not to have time for his oath, but during the while he is able to chaunt mass most expeditiously.

13. A thief has no delay of execution; but he is to swear by his execution and his death, to its being true what he says.

14. Why is it said, that a surety is to have a term of three days, to recollect himself? This is the reason: a term of three days he is to have, to know whether he be surety or not surety; and, in that term, he is to deny or to acknowledge it. After he shall have acknowledged his being surety, and stated his suretiship, then he is entitled to nine days of time.

15. There is a term of three days to the person who shall doubt the surety's statement, to procure a relic to administer an oath to the surety.

2. The second is, the land upon which the property shall be cast from the sea; whosoever may own the land, to the supreme lord belongs the property.

3. A homeless pauper; such a one is an alltud; and if he be killed, the lord is entitled to the entire of his galanas; since there is no kindred to participate.

4. A thief; for he shares his thief with no one.

5. A marw-dy; because, if a person die without bequeathing his property, the lord is entitled to all his property.

6. Ebediw from the person who ought to pay ebediw to him.

7. Dirwy.

8. And a camlwrw from the person who shall commit an unlawful act against him.

according to the character of the galanas. And nine score of silver, in respect to the three first; and twice nine score of silver, in respect to the three next; for each one of the three last, thrice nine score.

2. Is the payment due although the accessory be denied? It is: because payment and denial were there established by Howel, because of the atrocity of galanas.

3. Why is the punishment of the three last accessories greater than of the three middle ones; and the three middle ones than of the three first? This is the reason: the nearer the accessory approaches to the perpetration of the deed, the greater is to be the retribution for it.

4. Who is to prosecute an accessory of galanas? A relative is to prosecute, who shall be so near of kindred to the man who was killed, as to be liable to pay galanas on his account, as well as to receive it.

5. In what form is he to prosecute it? By swearing on the relic against him three times; and let the other deny on the relic.

6. Shall the kindred obtain right, if the raith as to the accessory fail? They shall not.

7. For what reason? No one is entitled to saraad, but the person upon whom the saraad is committed. Only the saraad of a corpse is due to the kindred from the perpetrator of the deed; for no one can be killed without saraad.

8. What penalty is due to the lord, if the raith as to accessory fail? Three pounds.

9. Can a lord prosecute an accessory, without a kindred? No: he cannot prosecute for any thing, without an accuser, but for his own property, and his lordship.

10. Why shall kindred prosecute an accessory, and yet not obtain right for it? It is in their option, either to prosecute, or to be silent.

11. Can an accessory be prosecuted prior to galanas? It cannot: because the galanas is the principal, and first to be prosecuted.

12. Why is there a greater raith for denying an accessory, than for denying galanas? Because there are to be men under vows and nod-men to deny galanas; and to deny accessory, only the men that can be procured.

13. Is there galanas without an accessory? There is: if a person be killed by poison.

14. What reason is there for that? Because there is no effusion of blood in that case.

XXI. [THE NINE ACCESSARIES OF THEFT.]

1. There are nine accessaries to theft; and fifty men are required to deny each of them. Should the denial fail, the lord is entitled to three pounds.

2. Who ought to prosecute an accessory to theft? The loser of the property.

3. Why is the denial of an accessory to theft greater than of galanas? Because, for denying accessory to theft nod-men are not required, but only such men as can be obtained.

4. Can any accessory be prosecuted before homicide? There cannot: because the act is greater than the accessory.

5. In what form is an accessory proceeded against? By bringing him to the relic three times; and his denying three times.

6. There is a strip of a hundred recurrences in respect to theft; because, whatever way it may come, whether by gift, or by borrowing, the lord is entitled to three pounds from every person, to the hundredth hand: he is so entitled, if the loser be a complainant on account of it.

7. In respect to a carcass killed by a wolf, there is likewise a strip of a hundred recurrences to whosoever shall take it, if there be a complainant on account of it; like the other case.

8. For the king's hart, after it shall be killed by the dogs of the king, there is a strip of a hundred recurrences: and nine score of silver is due for that strip, unto the hundredth hand. And the lord can be a complainant in respect to that; because he himself owns it.

XXII. THE NINE ACCESSARIES OF FIRE.

1. There are nine accessaries of fire; and that for feloniously burning; and fifty men shall deny each one of them. And three pounds is the penalty, if the raith fail; for theft is comprehended therein; and that accessory cannot be examined into, unless the owner of the house be a complainant, and swear upon the relic three times lawfully.

2. Three fires for which no satisfaction is to be made: the fire of a hamlet smithy doing the work of the men of the trev; if the fire cause damage in another trev, it is to be made good: heath burning in the month of March on a waste; if done amongst habitations, the mischief is to be made good, for heath burning is not to be

3. Is there an objection to an evidence?
 There is not: insomuch that if there be an objection, he is no evidence; after being admitted an evidence, he cannot be objected to.

4. Is there a case in law wherein there ought to be swearing to property not ³⁴pre-sent, and a prosecution for it as present?
 There is: if indivisible property be ³⁵lost, such as a bullock; if a part be had to swear to, then the whole worth of the bullock is to be had: and there absent property is sworn to.

5. If a blind person lose property; although it should be overtaken and found, it is not to be sworn to.

6. In whatever case it shall be adjudged for a person to swear to an ox, or a cow, after passing its prime, it ought not to be appraised to the amount of three score pence; because its worth in its prime was three score pence; and then it has passed such value: and that is the stay of appraisement.
 Thus a person is to give his ³⁶oath, in the case wherein it shall be adjudged for him to swear to property; that he would not give it without so much and so much, and that he could get so much for it.

7. A stallion grazing out loses its privilege; and, although it should lose its privilege of stallion, it has not lost its privilege of a palfrey.

8. And in like manner as to a greyhound, without its collar.

9. Is there a case in law, where a person shall tax the land of another person, and shall not tax his own land? There is:
 if a person pay taxable land, on account of galanas, as blood land, and after that obtain one of the twenty-four principal offices in the court; then he taxes the land he has paid as blood land; and, by the privilege of his office, he taxes not his own land.

10. Is there a case in law where a payment and a second payment are due for one debt?
 There is: if a person become surety for enforcing payment when he ³⁷can, he is to give his ³⁸oath that he cannot enforce it, if a relic be daily brought to him; from the day he gives not his oath, let him either enforce it, or let him pay. If the plaintiff come ³⁹on a

XXV. [OF A CROSS.]

1. No compensation is to be made for corn, that shall be standing after the calends of winter.

2. No cross is to be placed in corn, nor in grass, impounding only is right.

3. There is to be²⁷ no cross in pannage,²⁸ but mast-fee. The meaning of that is, if a lord find swine in his wood, from the fifth day before the feast of St. Michael, to the fifteenth day after New Year's day, he is entitled to kill the tenth animal; and so from one to one to the last. And a proprietor is not to preserve his wood, but from three days before the feast of St. Michael, to the tenth day after New Year's day; and of the swine he may find in his wood, within that time, let him kill the tenth sow: and he has not the right of killing the swine from one to one, as the lord is entitled to do. And there is to be no cross against an animal: and the owner is not bound to exonerate his swine, in respect to pannage, unless they be caught in the wood; since no money payment is due on account of their act; but they are to be killed, as it has been said before.

4. The measure of a meer between two cantreys is nine feet; the meer of two cymwds, seven feet; the meer of two trevs, five feet; the meer of two randirs, three feet; the meer of two erwes, two furrows, and that is called a balk. The penalty as to the meers, and the worth of them likewise, belong to the lord.

5. The measure of a lawful road is a fathom and a half.

6. There are to be two lawful roads in every trev: a road along, and another across. And six score pence is due to the lord, for ploughing up a road; but nothing is due for sowing it, nor for harrowing it: since there is no penalty for improving it.

7. Every habitation ought to have two footpaths: one to its church; and one to its 'watering-place. And the worth of a footpath is thirty-three pence; and to the owner of the land, over which the path may lead, the worth is to go. And there is no penalty to the lord for breaking up a footpath; for a cross upon a path is one of the three vain crosses.

8. The measure of a bye-road, by law, is seven feet. Every habitation ought to have a bye-road to the common waste of the trev; and to allow other land for it.

9. None of the grades of land-owners are to keep land from each other. The grades of land-owners are, brothers, and cousins, and second cousins; because the redivision recurs. A nephew is not entitled to a redivision.

10. There ought to be no retention of joint land; for, in every case it is to be divided; excepting in three cases: a 'bog; an oak wood; and a rock:' and of those there is never to be any retention, in any case, unless there be a refusal of sharing the land, by the youngest son. And if there be a refusal, there is to be no retention of his privileged homestead.

if the kin and descent be false, he is to hear nothing; if the kin be true, as asserted by the plaintiff, the lord is to summon the defendant into the field to answer to him.

4. Then the plaintiff is to state his claim to the land, and his kin and title.

5. Then the defendant is to call for time for aid to answer; and he is to appeal to the law.

6. Thereupon the judge is to adjudge time for him to answer, according to the distance of the plaintiff from the defendant. If he be in the same cymwd with him, he shall have three days; if he be in the second cymwd, five days; if he be in the other cantrev, he is to have a delay of nine days, to answer: and after he shall have answered, and the lord shall have set the law between them, and the plaintiff have called for surety upon what the law shall adjudge; the defendant can then call for time for obtaining surety, of equal length with the time for answering.

7. When that time expires, it is then incumbent upon the defendant to show the sureties, and to place them in the possession of the lord, until there shall be a decision by law.

8. Sureties to abide by law, for land and soil, are, living persons as pledges, two persons, or more, from each party, being men of the same privilege with the party for which they come: and for those there is no sanctuary in any place, either in church, or any where else.

9. And the plaintiff is not to have time for obtaining surety.

10. At the third meeting the law is to take its course: and the law is not to be but upon the land.

11. After all the terms shall have ended, and the pleadings come upon the land;
then it is incumbent upon the judge to arrange the parties lawfully, as has been mentioned above; and the judge is to order the parties: 'Speak you now, on both sides.'

12. Then the plaintiff is to declare his being the true proprietor of this land and soil, by kin and descent, and that he ought to have it; if his title be denied, that there are enough who know of his title being true, and that he has enough of guardians, who can preserve his proprietorship;

and appeal to the law that he is to have the whole of his right and his proprietorship; and, if he be opposed, that he is to have the benefit of his evidences and his guardians.

13. Then the defendant is to answer: by denying; or acknowledging; or by lawful arddelw, that he is neither to deny, nor to acknowledge. If the defendant acknowledge that; let there be adjudged to the plaintiff the extent of his claim. If he deny it; let the evidences of the plaintiff be made use of, and let the other object to them, if he be able.

14. And it is not necessary then to have land-borderers, but men of an adjunct trev, for they are proving a title, and not proving distribution.

15. If the defendant say: 'A lawful distribution of land and soil has been between me and thee; and there fell to thy share such and such a place; and thou hast that, a house-plot, as an equivalent for this land; and, if thou deniest that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that thou art not entitled to have a second distribution from me.'

16. If the plaintiff deny that, let the evidences of the defendant be made use of; and let the other object to them, by one of the three ways of objecting to evidences: for galanas; land-feud; and woman-feud; and it is necessary for their being land-borderers likewise. And, if the proof succeed, let the plaintiff be cast. If he say: 'Thy claim is a futile claim;' let the proceeding be stated as above.

17. If the defendant deny the kin and descent, he cannot; for the elders of the country have returned it.

18. Whosoever shall possess land during three lives of men, in the same country with the original proprietors, without their committing any one of the three legal disturbances, no reply shall ever be made to them concerning that land; because the law has completely barred between them and it. If they on their part do one of those three acts: whether breaking a plough; or burning a house; or killing a body: the claim does not become extinct, until the end of the ninth generation. And the cry of such person, becoming, from a proprietor a non-proprietor, in the last descent, will be listened to by the law: and that cry is called a cry over the abyss, and will be listened to.

1. There are three kinds of dadenhudd: dadenhudd by house and arature; and dadenhudd by car; and dadenhudd by bundle and burden.

2. No one can prosecute dadenhudd as to land, but for land that was in the hand of his father, when he died, and also in the hand of himself; he also being driven off the land unlawfully.

3. Then the plaintiff is to agitate a claim in one of the first nine days of May, or or the first nine days after the calends of winter. And, if he do not so proceed in one of the nine days of the calends of winter, or of the nine days of May, he shall not have an answer, until the other come. If he sue in the nine days of May, he is to have ²⁴judgment before nine days of the calends of winter; and, if he do not then obtain an answer, let him sue the second time within those nine days. And after he shall have agitated his claim in those two terms, the law shall never be shut to him afterwards, when the lord shall be minded to grant law to him.

4. After the lord shall have granted him law, and the parties are lawfully arranged, as has been mentioned above, and the judge has commanded the parties mutually to speak; then the plaintiff is to declare his having inhabited that land, with house and hearth and arature; and of his having been unlawfully driven from the land; and of his hearth having been unlawfully covered: ²⁵'And, if thou deniest that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that the hearth, which has been unlawfully covered, I am entitled to have lawfully uncovered.'

to say: 'By dadenhudd it is that I have come upon this land.' If he deny the having ousted him unlawfully, let the evidences of the plaintiff be made use of. And if the defendant be minded to object to those evidences, let him object by one of the three objections: land-feud not terminated; or galanas without reparation; or woman-feud: and that after they shall have sworn to what they are to prove. And, in like manner, let each object to the evidences of the other, through other evidences in the field.

6. And if the evidences of the plaintiff succeed, let it be adjudged for him to re-enter the place from whence he has been ²³unlawfully ejected, to uncover the hearth that had been formerly covered, unto the end of the year, without answering to any one, who may claim of him; and he is not then adjudged to be a proprietor, but a guardian, unto the term above fixed; and then to answer to such as shall question him, unless he shall have produced guardians at the commencement of his suit, in respect to his proprietorship, along with his evidences. And, if he shall produce guardians, along with his evidences, he can never be disturbed. If he do not produce them, he can be sued, when the above-mentioned terms shall arrive.

7. If the man who was originally the defendant be minded to proceed against him, he is to speak in this manner: after having become bound in law, he is to declare his being a proprietor upon that land, with a competent number of guardians to preserve to him his proprietorship; and that he is the subject of unlawful molestation; and let him name the man who is molesting him: 'And, if thou deniest thy being an unlawful molestation, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that I ought to enjoy the benefit of my evidences and my ²⁴guardians.'

8. Then the defendant is to say: 'I am a proprietor of this land and soil, and having enough of guardians who will secure to me my proprietorship; and to the law I appeal, that it is more just for me to keep the land, that is in my hand, than it is for thee to keep land, that is not in thy hand, and which ought not to be; and to the law I appeal, though thou mayst first name thy guardians, and thy evidences, that it is the lawful guardians who ought to be made

9. Then the judge is to receive the guardians of the defendant first, although left to be the last; because the lawful arddelw is to be first received. And, if the guardians be good, let the land be adjudged to him in perpetuity; but if the guardians fail, let the defendant be cast. And, after that, let the guardians of the plaintiff be made use of, and his ¹⁹security as to the land; and, if they shall be complete, let the land be adjudged to him; and, if they be not, let the land be adjudged to the lord, according to what has transpired between those two men; unless there be another person, who shall prove the land to be his property, rather than those who first disputed it.

10. And in that manner are proceedings for dadenhudd by car to be; and in that manner also are proceedings for dadenhudd by bundle and burden to be; and there it not necessary to have land-borderers, ²⁰but men of the adjunct trev, to prove his being ²¹unlawfully ejected from the land, in the manner it is required to prove a title to land. And it is necessary for the person, who has custody of land, ²²to have guardians who are land-borderers and men of the adjunct trev. An adjunct trev consists of randirs, which shall be collected together out of the trevs of uchelwrs, whose boundaries meet the boundary of the trev wherein the disputes may occur. And it is from those that land-borderers are to be procured.

11. And if the plaintiff protest against the guardian, that he is not a native of an adjunct trev; he can then say, that he is a native of an adjunct trev, having enough of guardians to preserve the privilege of an adjunct trev; and all that is required of those guardians is to be respectable and privileged.

12. If the original defendant say against the plaintiff: 'By dadenhudd I came upon the land and soil, with enough for me of guardians to secure the privilege of dadenhudd; and to the law I appeal, that one dadenhudd is not to come upon the back of another.' Then it is incumbent upon the judge to receive the guardians of the defendant; and, if they be firm 'in what they say,' let the plaintiff be cast, although he may possess the privilege of dadenhudd.

13. The privilege of dadenhudd is thus: if dadenhudd by house and arature be adjudged to a person, he is entitled to a term of a year and a day, without claim, and without answer to any one; if dadenhudd by car be adjudged to him, five days and five nights he shall have rest, without claim; if dadenhudd by bundle and burden be adjudged to a person, three days and three nights he shall rest, without claim, and without answer to any one who shall sue him.

XXIX. THUS MUTUAL STRIFE IS TO BE TREATED.

1. There cannot be mutual strife but between two persons seated upon the same land, and each asserting the whole land to belong to him. And nevertheless, the first who agitates a suit for the land, is to be the plaintiff for it; and to agitate a claim in the nine days of the calends of winter, or in the nine days of May, as has been mentioned before.

2. And after the lord shall have granted law between them, and the parties have been arranged, and the judge has ordered them mutually to speak; then the plaintiff is to declare the extent of his claim, and to declare his being a proprietor of that land and soil, having enough of guardians to secure his title; and enough who know the descent of the land to him by partition; and he is to appeal to the law to give him the benefit of his evidences, and his guardians.

the land; and enough of evidences for him, who know of the descent of this land to him by sharing; and he is to appeal to the law to give him the benefit of his evidences and his guardians first; because he is a lawful conservator of that land.

4. Then the judge is to take the pleadings; and, unless there be testimonies to restrain him, let him receive the evidences and the guardians of the defendant first; and let the other object to them, if he be able. And after those shall have been disposed of, let the evidences and the guardians of the plaintiff be made use of; and, let the other object to them, if he be able: and 'no one of the two parties can then bring either evidences, or guardians, but from an adjunct trev. If either evidences, or guardians of the one fail, let him be cast, as to the land; if each one's evidences and guardians succeed, let the land be shared between them; if each one's shall fail, let each one be cast.

XXX. THUS MATERNITY IS TO BE TREATED.

1. There are three women, with whose heirs there is to be no pleading, on the side of their mother: the son of a boneddig woman, whom a kindred shall give to an alltud; and the son of a woman given as hostage for a kindred, she bearing the son in her hostage state; and a son who shall avenge a man of his mother's kindred, and lose his paternal inheritance on account of that deed.

2. If the son of a woman, given to an alltud, be minded to sue for maternity, he is to proceed in this manner: to come to his lord, and demand of him right and law.

3. Then his lord is to summon his kindred to 'answer to' him; that is to say, the brothers of his mother, and her cousins, and her second cousins; because it is those who ought to have been the givers of her away, and because it is 'upon their land' the son of their kinswoman will come, if they give her to an alltud. For those persons are the grades as to land: and no person can admit any one to maternity, nor give patrimony to any one, nor admit him in perpetuity, without the consent of the above three grades.

If he deny it, let the evidences of the 'plaintiff be made use of; and let the other object to them, if he be able, as has been mentioned before. If his proof succeed, he shall have a share of the land, equal in quantity with one of the brothers of his mother; excepting the principal homestead, to which he shall not be entitled until the third descent. If he acknowledge it, let there be a sharing with him, as has been said before. If the defendant say: 'Thy mother was not the daughter of the man whom thou dost mention; and, therefore, I ought not to answer thee, as to this claim.'

7. Then let the plaintiff say: 'I appeal to the law, that no one has a right to deny another, where it pertains to share land with him; and that is truth.'

8. If the defendant say: 'There is a paternal inheritance pertaining to thee in such and such a place; if thou deniest that, there are enough for me who know it; and to the law I appeal, that one possessed of paternal inheritance is not entitled to maternity.'

9. If he acknowledge that, let him be content with his paternal inheritance: if he deny it, let the evidences of the defendant be made use of.

against me, as to this very claim; and that thou didst remain silent afterwards, for a year and a day; 'and to the law I appeal, that I am not to answer to thee further.

11. If the lord confirm his having formerly agitated a claim, and been silent in respect to it for a year and a day; 'it is not incumbent ever to answer to such a claim.

12. If the defendant mind to say, in opposition to the plaintiff: 'I have heretofore condemned thee by law; if thou deniest that, there are for me enough who know it:' let him speak those words, before he binds himself in another suit. If he do not so speak, he must answer to the suit wherein a mutual binding has taken place.

13. If the son of a woman delivered as a hostage will to claim maternity, he is to do it in the manner reported above, in respect to stating a claim. Then the son is to declare that that man, and his kindred the grades in respect to land, delivered his mother as hostage for them unjustly; and during that hostage state an alltud, having accomplished her violation, begat him by such violation: 'And, if thou deniest that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, since you delivered my mother, as your hostage, into a situation where you could not protect her against violation, that I am entitled to have a share from you of the land.'

14. Then the defendant is to answer him, by denying, or acknowledging, or by arddelw, as in the other maternity above mentioned.

15. If the plaintiff acknowledge that, let there be a sharing made with him, as in the other case above. If he deny it, let the evidences of the plaintiff be made use of; and let the other object to them if he can; and, if his proof succeed, he is to have a share.

16. If the defendant avouch, that he ought not to answer, let him avouch it, as in the case of the other maternity. If the defendant in a suit of maternity say: 'What maternity soever it may be, thy mother gave herself up willingly to the man:' and shall attempt to bring forward evidences as to that point, he is not permitted; since a proof as to the dead is not pertinent: and, although the party may be alive, he is not permitted; since no one ought to answer to him, except the person who is mutually bound with him; and the woman is not mutually bound with him.

1. Distribution is, in the first place, to be between brothers: the youngest is to choose his tyddyn, with such houses as may be upon the eight erws, if he be an uchelwr; and from oldest to oldest let them choose their tyddyn, and to every one what houses may be upon his tyddyn. And, after that, let the youngest son share, in every case; and from oldest to oldest let them choose. Afterwards, cousins are entitled to a re-sharing; but no one shall remove from his tyddyn for another; because the tyddyns are of such number, that no one is obliged to be a builder for another. And in that manner are second cousins to re-share. And, after the third sharing, let every one retain his share in his possession lawfully through guardians of landborderers.

XXXIII. THUS FINAL SHARING IS TO BE TREATED.

1. Whoever shall have a first sharing is entitled to a final sharing: for the law will not sever the due of any one, unless a contract do so.

2. If there be one who willet to claim a final sharing, he is to do it thus: after the parties shall have been lawfully arranged, and the judge has commanded them mutually to speak; then the plaintiff is to state his claim; and to declare his being a brother, or a cousin, or a second cousin: since there can be no claim to a share, but by one of those persons, being a brother to him, and a proprietor; and having enough to secure his proprietorship to him. If it be denied that he obtained a first sharing, that there are enough for him who know of his having obtained it; and appealing to the law, that having a first sharing, he is entitled to have a final sharing of the land.

3. Then the defendant is to answer in one of three ways: by acknowledging; or denying; or by lawful arddelw that he is not to answer.

4. And, in that manner every defendant is to answer, as to every thing, in one of those three ways.

5. If the defendant acknowledge that, let there be a sharing with him. If he deny it, let the evidences of the plaintiff be made use of; and, if his evidences succeed, let there be a sharing with him. If the defendant say: 'I have shared with thee the whole; if thou deniest that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that I am not to make the second sharing with thee.'

6. If the plaintiff acknowledge that, let him rest satisfied with what he has obtained. If he deny it, let the evidences of the defendant be made use of. Those kind of evidences are to be, a man from each randir of an adjunct trev. If the plaintiff say: 'As to what thou hast shared with me, I will not deny, and that is so much and so much; and so much remains without being shared: if thou deniest that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that I am first entitled to make use of my evidences.'

7. Then the defendant is to say: 'I have said a while ago, that I had shared the whole with thee; and it is I who first put that in the mouths of lawful evidences; and to the law I appeal, that I am first entitled to make use of them.' The law

2. If there be a contention as to a meer between two trevs of equal privilege, it belongs to prior conservancy to meer. If their two conservancies be of equal duration, twenty-four of the elders of the cantrev are to determine, if they know it; if they do not know, let the plaintiff go and show his boundary, on the side towards the defendant, and let him swear to the boundary; and let him show it in three places: he is to show it where it commences, and in the middle, and at the extreme end. And after that, let the defendant show his boundary also; and let him swear to his boundary in the three places. And let no one take randir 'furrows in what he shall take; if he do so take, he loses it altogether.

7. The three stays of a meer: exhibition of a randir; privilege; and a building: because a meer cannot be shown athwart those; and a randir cannot be taken in showing.

8. If there be a contention between two trevs as to privilege, and each one assert: 'Mine is the best privilege,' and, 'Mine is the best privilege.' Then the judge is to inquire of the plaintiff, what privilege they have. Then the plaintiff is to set forth their privilege, whether by chief-ship of kindred, or by canghellor-ship, or other privilege, with enough of guardians to secure this privilege. ⁹Afterwards, let the judge inquire of the defendant what privilege he has likewise. Then he is to specify their privilege also, like the others, with enough of guardians also to secure this privilege. Then the judge is to consider the guardians of each party; and the one whose privilege is superior, as secured to it, is to be adjudged to meer to the other.

XXXVI. THESE ARE THE VARIOUS CASES WHEREIN GUARDIANS ARE REQUIRED.

1. For custody of birth and rearing; for custody before loss; for custody of guests; for custody of land and soil; for custody of privilege; for custody of an alltud state as to a person; and for custody as to disease in an animal.

XXXV. THESE ARE THE KIND OF MEN WHO ARE TO BE GUARDIANS IN EACH OF THOSE CASES.

1. For custody of birth and rearing, and for custody before loss, men of the same privilege with the defendant; and, although the defendant should have no privilege, it is necessary for the guardians to possess privilege.

2. For custody of guests, the people of the house.

3. For custody of land and soil, uchelwrs, being land-borderers.

4. For custody of privilege, privileged men.

5. For custody of an alltud state, respectable moral men.

6. For custody as to disease in an animal, respectable moral persons.

7. And it is necessary for every guardian to be respectable.

8. There are two cases in which an alltud may free himself by equal sharing with his lord, although it be displeasing to his lord: when he acquires maternity; and when an alltud from beyond sea willeth to go to the country whereof he is a native: and if he tarry in the country longer than during the three first winds, by which he might go to his country, and do not then go, he must return to his alltud state in the place he was before.

XXXVII. THUS AN ALLTUD IS TO BE CLAIMED.

1. After mutual binding in law, and order by the judge to the parties mutually to speak; then the plaintiff, or his advocate for him, must state the extent of his claim on this man; and let him name the man who is an alltud; and let him say of the alltud: 'It is due for thee to be an alltud to me; and thy parents also were alltuds to my parents; and thou, therefore, oughtest also to be an alltud to me. And, if thou deniest that, there are for me enough who know of thy having departed unlawfully from me; and, if thou deniest that, there are for me enough who know it; and to the law I appeal, that thou oughtest to return.'

2. Then the defendant is to prefer one of three answers: acknowledgment; or denial; or lawful arddelw that it shall not be necessary for him to *answer.

3. If he acknowledge, let him return to his alltud state. If he deny it, let the evidences of the plaintiff be made use of; and let the other object to them, if he be able. If he say: 'I am a proprietor, having enough of guardians to secure for me my proprietorship; and to the law I appeal, that a proprietor is not compelled to answer to a claim of alltud state.' Then the judge is to receive the guardians; and if they be complete, as to the privilege in the hand of the man, let the judge pronounce him free. And thus it is as to an alltud, if he himself resist the claim.

4. If another uchelwr insist on possessing the alltud, and there be a contention, as to who ought to become bound in law, whether the alltud himself, or the uchelwr for him; the law says, that it is the uchelwr must become bound for his alltud, as for other property: and his guardians are more powerful to protect his alltud in his possession, than the witnesses, and than the evidences of the plaintiff; for, neither witnesses, nor evidences, are admissible in opposition to guardians. And, although a person may be owner of his alltud as of other property, they are not of the same privilege; for there is to be no swearing to an alltud.

5. If another say, that he is his alltud: 'And I am a truly privileged master over him.' And, although the alltud say, that he is a true alltud to him, it is necessary for the first defendant to bring forward guardians to secure the alltud; for one of the cases where there ought to be guardians is, for custody of an alltud. And if the plaintiff be minded to proceed against them, let him do so in the manner he ought to do, by rendering them ineffective.

6. The complaint of no one is lawful for saraad, but from one term to another.

7. No one is to complain by another for saraad, if he be able to appear himself; and, unless the one complained for shall stand to his plaint, let him who complained pay camlwrw to the lord.

XXXVIII. [INTERROGATORIES.]

1. Is there a case where a person is to do right for theft, without conviction in a court, without failure of raith, and without acknowledgment from his own mouth? There is: if a person suspect another of theft, and come with a relic to him, in the presence of witnesses, although on a bridge of a single tree, and demand of him an oath, and the accused should then fail. For there is no time for the oath of an absolver, as to theft, but the time when demanded; and there is for every suit, except for theft.

2. Is there any case where a person is entitled to more than the stated extent of his claim? There is; if a person have lent property to another, and the person deny it; and the plaintiff prove it, he is to have double payment.

3. Is there any person who is entitled to come into possession of land, without paternity, without maternity, and without investiture by a lord? There is: if a taeog take the son of a breyr to foster, by the consent of his lord; that son shall be a co-participator of the inheritance of the taeog, like one of his own sons.

4. Is there any saraad on which there shall be an augmentation? There is: the saraad of a woman, upon whom a violation shall be committed; such a one shall have an augmentation of a third.

These things always delay proceedings at law : death ; disease ; or a wound ; or a stab ; or bed-ridden illness ; or imprisonment for debt ; or a sea voyage, by reason of a storm, or contrary wind between the party and his duty ; or that he may not hear of his citation ; or that he may not be able to ride a horse, or go on foot ; or that neither he, nor his messenger, have free access to his country. And those affect the plaintiff as well as the defendant ; because the law is impartial.

6. These are what are primarily due to the lord from his dominion : allegiance ; obedience ; and military service.

7. Is there any case where the lord has the right of hanging, and worth, and dirwy, for the same deed ? There is : for a thief for less than a penny, three pounds is his dirwy ; and being banished for that, and found the second time, it is right to sell him ; and, if he be found the third time, he is to be hanged.

8. Is there any saraad for which no full right can be obtained, although acknowledged ? There is : the saraad of a married woman, on account of a kiss.

9. Is there any case where the proof of galanas may be stronger than the raith to deny it ? There is : when a person claims land by maternity, on account of losing his father's patrimony, for avenging one of the relatives of his mother.

10. The four bonds of a claim : surety ; briduw ; witnesses ; and evidences.

11. There are four defences : a raith to deny surety ; proof of payment of the debt ; guardians ; and arddelw.

12. Whosoever shall claim a promise, or a contract, or an exchange, let him claim through a surety ; as there can be no change without a surety.

13. Three pledges which it is not unlawful to use before they lapse : to wit, a milch cow ; a harp ; and a throw-board.

14. Three violences not to be compensated : to wit, violence by an army ; injury by fire ; and injury by the sea.

of making one of the three lawful disturbances, if he will to recover it: to wit, to kill a body; or to burn a building; or to break a plough. If he do not one of those three, let the ousted proprietor lose it; and his son cannot maintain a suit of mutual strife afterwards. Since the proprietor could not make one of those three law disturbances, he is to have a refuge upon his father's patrimony, unto the ninth person. If the ninth person come not to claim it, or any one intermediately to him, he and his children are excluded from his father's patrimony.

2. If [the eldest son of] a chief of a territory be not competent to rule it, nor to sustain it; if he be afflicted with one of the three blemishes, the next eldest son to the king is to be edling, and acquire his privilege. If the king have no son, then his brother is to be edling. If there be no brother to the king, a man co-equal in dignity is to be edling. After fealty shall be sworn to him, and the whole of his privilege be recognized in the court, his worth is equal to that of the king; and his saraad equal to that of the king; excepting that gold is not to be paid to him, nor the rod of silver. And it may happen for his saraad to exceed that of the king: for, if there should be a cantrev wanting to the king of his dominion, or if he were to forego the obtaining the whole of his privilege, the edling could demand his privilege from them in the case where he might remit nothing of his privilege, on entering into possession of his dominions.

3. Should there be sureties for a person to keep the peace, and he break the peace; the sureties are not to answer, if the transgressor be found. But the sureties must pay for the breach of the peace, if the person cannot pay himself. And that is the judgment of Tudor the son of John Red-head, the seventh year of Henry the sixth, in the court of Issaled.

not only men have liberty to withstand violence, but also irrational animals.

8. Whoever shall kill or wound the animal of another person in defending himself, is not to be molested for it ; other than this, that he do nothing further than reasonable defence to save his life.

9. If judgment be given against a person not resident in the same country as the judge, after he shall reside in the same country as the judge he can mutually pledge when he will, within a year and a day. If he do not prosecute a claim within a year and a day, the law is closed between him and the judge.

10. Whoever shall deny the breaking of a cross ; let him give the oaths of three men, along with himself.

11. Whoever shall deny a burden that can be carried under the arm, which shall not be of three score pence in value, or more ; let him give the oaths of five men.

12. Whoever shall deny a horse-load ; let him give the oaths of twelve men, six nod-men, six not nod-men.

13. Whoever shall charge a person with taking a horse, or a mare, or a cow, or an ox, by stealth, let the loser accept the oath of an absolver ; for he is free after that, according to the law of Howel. And let him who shall take the oath swear, that he caused neither loss, nor want, to the other ; and that he did not travel, either by day, or by night, along with the property of the other ; and that he got neither a part, nor a share, thereof ; and that he knows not that he is guilty, or accessory : and these are called the four words of the loser.

14. If a raith be required of him, he is to give the oaths of twelve men ; six of them nod-men, and the other six not nod-men.

15. If the loser shall swear his loss against the thief ; the like number of oaths are required of him.

16. If he be charged upon information, the oaths of twenty-four men are required.

17. Whoever shall prosecute for theft, is to proceed in this manner : to name the person upon whom he shall charge the theft ; and describe the thing stolen, for which he shall proceed ; and the quantity of what is stolen, for which he shall proceed ; and by the four words of the loser he is to proceed, according to the law of Howel ; and that at large. After that, there is to be a denial of each word separately ; and testifying on each word ; and if cast in a word, then judgment on a word.

16. And thus the prosecutor speaks, naming the party, and his father, if he prosecute for an animal: 'Thou hast removed mine from its water and its grass; and thou hast travelled day and night with it; and thou hast had a part and share thereof; and thou knowest thyself to be guilty, or accessory; and thou hast wrought disgrace, and shame, and scandal, to my lord; and loss, and want, and damage, to me and to mine; with forfeit of life, and danger of death, to thyself for it, by thy being guilty respecting it; and that through the impulse of theft, and felony, and their accessories; and thou hast traversed wood and field, free and tangle, wet and dry, hill and dale, country and border country, law and not law, union and disunion; and, if thou doubttest it, I will prove it against thee.'

19. Thus the other is to deny it: 'I have a complete denial to what thou dost advance;' and naming the property, its colour, and its size; and naming himself, and his father; and then each word after the other, in the manner stated by the prosecutor: 'and, in addition to that, if the law sees it right to receive proof from thee of charge of theft, I have that will protect me; and I appeal to the law, which one is most worthy of credit, I, in denying, to show my innocence, or thou, in attempting to prove against me what thou hast not seen upon me, and which thou knowest not.'

20. The prosecutor then is to say: 'If I knew, I would not deny; by stealth thou hast taken from me; and in my own person I did not see; and although I might not see, I have who saw it; and who will make it appear, eye to eye, in the way that the law shall adjudge best.'

21. And thereupon the other is to say: 'If there shall come to me such as shall so make it appear; when there shall be place and time for me to disprove it, I will.'

22. Then the prosecutor is to bring the informant before the judge, take the relic, and ask him: 'Art thou the informant?' And if he say: 'I am;' let the judge order him to swear upon the relic, to having seen that thief, in the light of the open day, naming him, and the theft spoken of by the prosecutor, in the form and manner stated by him, and of the magnitude and size, the sun being high, and shining; and he avouching it; and that he is speaking against him neither for hatred, nor for malice, nor for worth, nor for reward, nor for kindred, nor for love; but from knowing it, and from seeing it, and from its being true.

23. And then the person who shall be charged with the theft, is to object to him, in one of the ways that a witness is to be objected to: and, if he can object to him, let him be rejected, and cast in the suit; but, if the objection fail, he is to stand: and there is in the judgment-book the requisite sentence concerning him.

II. THE NINE ACCESSARIES OF KINDRED ARE THE FOLLOWING, BY WHICH STRANGERS CAN BECOME RELATIONS.

1. One of them is, releasing a person from the prison of a border country, and joining him, and accompanying him.

2. The second is, the junction of a stranger with an expedition of the relatives of a prisoner into a border country, with the intent of releasing him, in place of a kin to him.

3. The third is, a prisoner whose release is to be bought by his kinsmen, and whose worth, being shared according to the scale of relationship, is to be collected; and one of his kinsmen refuse, whether a cousin, or a second cousin, or a third cousin, and, "for want of the share of" such, his release from prison is prevented, and a stranger stand in the place of such kin, to pay the share that fell upon that kin, and his liberation be thereby obtained.

4. The fourth is, protecting a person against the push of a spear, or against the stroke of a weapon raised above his head, with the design of killing him, and being thus saved by a stranger, before he be struck, and so rescued.

5. The fifth is, if a person be killed, and his kindred shall not obtain right, and his kinsmen proceed to avenge their kin, and they deem their number small, and a stranger come, and proceed along with them, upon the privilege of a kin, saying: 'I will go along with you, to avenge your kin, and will take upon myself the slaughter and the blood of him whom ye also shall take upon yourselves;' and they kill one, or more, on account of their kin; such stranger obtains the privilege of a kin.

of him, on the part of a debtor; and the assault take place upon the house, or the place, wherein the person shall be, and he escape, by means of the warning; that stranger acquires the privilege of a kin to him.

7. The seventh is, if there be two, strangers to each other, travelling as companions, and they meet the enemies to 'one, two men, or more: 'Well!' says he who sees his enemies, 'seest thou, seest thou yonder men, who will have me, and since there is no kin with me, they will have me cheaply.' Says his stranger companion: 'I will fight along with thee, and I will take upon myself the blood of such as thou shalt take upon thyself:' and he escape because of that; that stranger acquires the privilege of a kin to him.

8. The eighth is, releasing a person from bondage.

9. The ninth accessory is, if a person be condemned to lawful wager of battle, either for land and soil, or for any crime; and he should dread in his heart entering into personal combat; and a stranger should arise, and say to him: 'I will go in thy stead to combat;' and he should escape thereby; such stranger acquires the privilege of a brother to him, or nephew, the son of a sister, to receive galanas, or to pay it for him.

III. [OF GALANAS.]

1. The share of a brother, of galanas, is one pound.
2. The share of a cousin, is half a pound.
3. The share of a second cousin, is three score pence.
4. The share of a third cousin, is thirty pence.
5. The share of a fourth cousin, is fifteen pence.
6. The share of a fifth cousin, is seven pence halfpenny.
7. Whoever shall be condemned to forfeit his life, by law, his galanas is neither to be demanded nor paid.
8. Some say, when six score and six kine of galanas are to be paid, either more or less, that the six kine are paid for saraad, and the six score kine are paid for galanas: and that saraad is not to be augmented. And, as that saraad is not to be augmented, six score of silver are not paid along with the six kine; for, wheresoever the law shall adjudge a cow and twenty of silver for the

it has; and state by which of the three detentions thou art deprived of the property, or the injury; and state the condition of the plaintiff, or of the defendant, at the time the ¹surreption was committed.

And so terminates the explanation of the four bonds of a suit.

6. Whoever shall leave any one of the four bonds above mentioned unstated, there is an ambiguity in his claim; and for that his claim is inadmissible; and no answer need be made to the claim but at the time as an answering party: and if part of each of the four bonds be stated without stating the whole, as if there should be claimed for the ¹surreption more or less than ought to be, by law; it is a faulty word, for which the plaintiff is to lose so much of his claim as pertains to the faulty word, and it is not to be answered only to the plaintiff's loss, as it shall pertain to the claim: and there is the difference between a faulty word and an ambiguity. And unless one of the four bonds above mentioned can be demonstrated to be true, no answer is ever to be given to the plaintiff.

²And so it terminates according to the form of the author.

v. OF RELIGIOUS PERSONS.

1. If there be complaints individually against some of the community of an abbot in the court of a cymwd, or cantrev, and they should contemn the court, by not coming to present themselves; and, upon that contempt, distress should be adjudged, and property taken from the monastery, or from its barn, by an officer; let the abbot come before the officer to the court, and say that he is the owner of that property, by an inseparable propriety from the privilege of the supremacy of the monastery; and that no ¹distress should be made upon his property, where not made through a plaint by a co-party with the defendant, and proving the contempt against him; the officer, according to law, is to allow his defence, and release his distress.

2. If the officer say, that he will not release the distress, unless the court shall so decide; let the abbot say, that that court is not to decide any thing, in respect to him, and that he is not under its jurisdiction as to any suit: the way of that is, there are three kinds of judges, according to law; and the first of them, the judge of the supreme court of the king, and no judge but him, is to judge an abbot according to privilege, or his litigations, by law.

3. If the plaint be conjointly against the abbot and his professed, let them come together timely into court; and, after claim and demand shall be heard, let the abbot reply in his defence, by appealing as a party from that jurisdiction. For,

4. There are three kinds of withdrawal, according to law: the first is, from the court to the session; the second is, as to the mode; the third is, as to the matter.

5. That is, whoever shall be assigned to preside in a court having a supreme judicial officer, before such he is to appear, through truth and law; and a judge of inferior privilege is not to decide upon him, nor upon his professing associate: as it has been established for the abbot to answer before a judge of the king's supreme court in certain cases, and to withdraw in certain other cases, the which may press upon the integrity of his religious profession; for through the judgment of that judge the professed were released from the law of the world to the law of the faith, under the government of their abbot.

6. If there be some who suppose it to pertain to an abbot, or to some of his professing community, to apply for the revocation of a wrong judgment pronounced by the judge of a cymwd, or cantrev, involving damages against them; they are not by law. The way of that is, those courts had not the privilege to determine any thing respecting them, either of release, or punishment; as if a laic, without having privilege, either from land, or from office, were to pronounce judgment of forfeiture against a person; it would not be pertinent for him to enter into mutual pledge, as to such judgment, according to law, but to maintain it to be a point of wrong decision, and require punishment for it, and the royal judge be obliged to give a new decision upon the suit. And, in a manner similar therewith, neither the abbot, nor his religious, can be required to call for the judgment of the judge of the court of a cymwd, or cantrev; since such courts possess not the privilege of determining upon them, either for release, or for damage. And, if such courts give a decision for damage against those religious, the officer is to know, before he assist the party, unless he commit oppression against law, through the judgment of the judge of the supreme court of the lord, whether the cause be lawful. For Howel the good, according to his law, permitted every chief, who should have one cymwd, or more, to hold a daily court, with competent number of officers, the same as himself, by regal prerogative, with privilege, and sanctuaries, and to hold a supreme daily court, in right of office; and to hold pleas among his uchelwrs in his country, by the universal law of Cymru. And should it happen for that judge to pronounce a wrong judgment against the abbot, or his religious, to their damage, such judgment is to be moved and pursued to obtain judgment from the lord himself; for his office is not to be taken from the judge, until he shall be convicted by written law and judgment: and there is the single case wherein the lord himself is compelled, by law, to give judgment.

7. If a defendant of a border country give surety to answer in law the plaint of a party, and he should contemn ⁴his suretiship' on the day of call; unless the surety deny the suretiship, let him pay to the plaintiff the whole of his claim; for he is a frustrate surety, since he has not been able to enforce his suretiship as to the other, and that being a one day suretiship, and extinguished; as there is no way, by law, to enforce a bond of distress against a border country defendant: for it is a contempt of summons, or suretiship, that a person come not, on the day of call, to an appointed court to answer, or to defend his not answering.

8. If the surety seek to stand on the privilege of a defendant to deny, or to defend the suit, he is not, by law; for no one can plead the essential matter of a suit, except a defendant who shall be obedient to law.

9. If a defendant, in a country, give surety to answer; if he contemn the court in the day of call, unless the surety denies his suretiship, let him pay a camlwrw to the lord, and then the privilege of his suretiship ceases: and the defending party is to be compelled by distress until he comes to answer the claiming party. And this regards the plaint of a party in the same country.

VI. [OF A CLAIM.]

1. In the law of Howel there are, a claim, a counter-claim, a sur-claim, and a trifling claim.

2. The meaning of which is this: according to law, a counter-claim is not to be set up against a claim: as if a person sell a horse to another, with sureties against a certain day for obtaining payment, and enter an action for its worth; and the defendant set up, against the claimant, as to the horse he had bought, one of these points, that it had the staggers, or the farcy, or the black strangles, or that it was restive; and say, that the seller ought to return him what the law might adjudge to him, for the point he brought against him. The law says, that he is not to be allowed that answer, because it is a counter-claim; and such are substantial matters of suit; and the law saying, there ought not to be a counter-claim set up against a claim.

3. This is the meaning of a sur-claim: if a person borrow a horse, or any thing else, from another; and, before the horse come home to its owner, a claim be set up by another to the horse, in the hand of the borrower, who makes a payment of some kind to such as might claim it of him; or give sureties to him who might claim, for a certain day, until he could obtain a guarantor concerning it: and coming to the person, of whom he borrowed the horse, and requiring him to come to warrant the horse for him, or pay the sum he had parted with. If the borrower paid money to him who might claim the horse of him, the person who lent him the horse is not to warrant for him, nor pay any sum to the borrower for any arrangement, or bargain, which the borrower might enter into, in the absence of him who had lent the horse, for that constitutes a sur-claim upon the borrowing; and the law saying, whoever shall borrow an animal, or any thing else, is to return it, without claim, and without sur-claim thereon.

4. A trifling claim is such as this: if a person demand and claim a thing of another in court, the which thing had previously undergone a determination by one of the three legal determinations, he is not to be heard, nor such kind of claim to be entertained; for the law says, that it is a trifling claim: because it was great trifling to sue for a claim of that kind.

1. Three free sons of the bond; a clerk; a bard; and a smith.

2. Three bond sons of the free: the sons of the above.

3. Three persons whose word is not to be taken against any one, or any thing: a professed who shall have broken his profession; a man who shall bear false testimony; and a common thief.

4. Three afflictions in which there is no saraad: one is, the blow of a youth, under the legal age of fourteen years; a blow from lawful anger; and an unintentional blow: blood and wound, however, are to be compensated, and a broken bone if it occur.

5. The three things common to a kindred are: a chief of kindred; a family representative; and the son of a woman given, by gift of kindred, to an enemy; such son is to be common to the two kindreds.

6. Three things which protect a person from a summons to court: a cry against a host from a border-country; a flood, without bridge, or cobble; and bed-ridden sickness.

7. Three daughters for whom amobyr is not due: the daughter of a lord; the daughter of an edling; and the daughter of a chief of household: they are not due, because their fathers owe no ebediws but their steeds, their greyhounds, their arms, and their hawks; for the daughter of a lord there is no amobyr, for there is no one who can ask it, and he is not to have the amobyr of his own daughter.

8. Three persons whom the mother's kindred are to demand without the father's kindred: the son of a boneddig woman who shall be given to an alltud; the son of a woman whose father is unknown; and the son of a woman denied by the father's kindred: the mother's kindred are to have the galanas, because they are to do right for them, and they have no father's kindred: some say that the mother's kindred are to pay cattle without surety for every one of those; the law says, they are only paid for the son of an alltud.

9. Three things which every person can take without the consent of another: water not in a vessel; a stone not in use; and firing from a hollow tree.

10. Three persons who are to have tithe: a priest; a judge; and an informant: a judge is to have the tenth penny of what

14. Three persons who receive a share of galanas, and do not pay any : a lord ; a judge ; and an apparitor : a lord is to have a third of every galanas that he shall enforce ; a judge is to have a share of the galanas ; and an apparitor is to enforce it and collect it, and to have four pence for the duty.

15. Three things which a judge is not to hear in his presence : pleading after judgment ; objection before a verdict ; denial after law.

16. Three persons who are to be kept from arms : a bondman ; a youth under fourteen years of age ; and a public idiot : their kindred are to keep idiots from doing wrong ; and likewise a father is to keep his son, until the age of fourteen, from arms, for he is to pay for him until that age ; and likewise a lord is for ever to keep his bondman from arms, and, unless he do so, let him pay another bondman for the arms, and the bondman to be executed for the murder.

17. Three things which are not to be augmented : wyncb-werth ; and saraad of an alltud ; and for his murder or galanas, for his dignity is not sufficient for that ; nor the privilege of a dead person the same as that of a living one : therefore, no augmentation takes place on any of the three.

Three sons who are not to have patrimony: the son of a priest; the son of a leper; and the son of a man who had paid his patrimony as blood land: the son of a leper is not to have it, because God has separated him from worldly kin; that is, such son as a leper may have after being adjudged to a lazarus house; and a son a priest shall have after taking priestly orders; and the third has no patrimony, as his father, prior to him, had determined it by law.

20. Three women whose sons are to have land by maternity: a boneddig woman given, by gift of kindred, to an alltud, by which alltud she has sons; those are to have a share of the land with the brothers of their mother, with the exception of such land which has privilege ^{or dignity}, of which they are not to have a share until the fourth man, as there is no one on the father's part to have it, unless they be the sons of an alltud chieftain: the second is, if a maiden be on the privilege of her father, her brothers, and her kindred, and be violated by an alltud; if she have a son from that circumstance, he is to have a share of the land with the brothers of his mother: the third is, if a boneddig woman be given as a hostage in a foreign country, and there be pregnant, and have a son; he is to have a share of the land with her brothers: the children of the first wife are to have a share, because her brothers alienized her children when they gave her to an alltud; and as they ought not to have given their sister, but where her children might have had land, her children are to have land by maternity: the children of the second woman are to have maternity, because whilst she was on the privilege of her brothers and her kindred they ought to have guarded her from every wrong, and, therefore, as she sustained that wrong while under their arddelw, her children are to have maternity: the ^{children} of the third woman are to have maternity, for whilst as

21. There are three lawful sessions : the session of a lord ; the session of a bishop ; and the session of an abbot : and to those three homage is due, and the man of no one of them is to do right but in his own session ; unless a man of the bishop's, or a man of the abbot's, in either of the other two, or either of the other two in the session of the abbot, let every one of those do right in the place he does the wrong.

22. The three supports of a pledge are : a hand ; arm ; and shoulder : they are called the supports of a pledge, because a pledge is not to be given that cannot be borne on one of those places, unless the plaintiff will it ; except the debt be of that amount that nothing but a great matter can be pledged ; because an immoveable thing is not to be pledged for a moveable due.

23. The three co-ordinate pledges are : a pledge from the hand of a surety ; from the hand of a debtor ; and from the hand of a lord or of his servant, for an acknowledged debt without surety for it, and without security, yet acknowledged.

24. Three pledges for which sureties for their dilyrwydd are not needed : one from the hand of a surety ; one a plaintiff shall take from the surety who might not will to fulfil his suretiship ; and one from the hand of a lord, or that of his servant : there is no need of a surety for the dilyrwydd of a pledge from the hand of a surety, or from the hand of a lord, because those persons will not deny the pledging from their hands for the thirst of lucre, nor for any thing else ; ³⁰if they were to deny that pledge they would have to pledge another : and a surety is not needed for the dilyrwydd of a pledge taken from a surety, for it is taken against his will ; and if he give one willingly, let the claimant take surety from him for its dilyrwydd, lest he deny at another time that he gave it.

25. Three sureties which are not to be denied : a surety for a judge's fee ; and a surety from the lord ; or from his servants.

city of a parish; in a lawful session; or in the presence of a lord: those three places being three lawful publicities, and there is nothing done publicly, which can be denied ⁶in law. And although the defendant is not to deny sureties, the law does not maintain that the surety is not to deny his becoming surety against the compulsion of the apparitor; for, the law says, when a surety shall deny his suretiship, against the compulsion of the apparitor, let him give his own oath and that of six men of equal privilege with himself; for there is to be no counter-oath but against a surety for an original debt; but, a surety who becomes so publicly, let him deny through a verdict of the country, except where a record of court shall be pertinent.'

27. Three complexities of law: sharing of galanas; the worth of buildings and furniture; and a cause of surety and debtor:
they are so called, because they are difficult to remember and reduce to rule.

28. There are three animals whose foot and life are of the same worth: a horse;
a greyhound; and a hawk: the reason is, because they are unclean, and are worthless when they are lame, as their use depends upon their feet; and, therefore, their feet are of the same worth as their lives.

29. Three places where the law shares in halves: the first is, if there be a debt with a surety for it, and the debtor leave the country, or, although in the country, be reduced to poverty and cannot pay; the surety there is to pay half the debt, although innocent, for causing the plaintiff to credit him; the second is, if there be a dispute as to meers between two men equally proprietors in privilege and conservancy, and the elders of the country know not the right meer between them; the third is, if there be an island in a river not nearer to one than another; every equality is to be shared, and this is so: equality is, every cause on which each evidence is co-existent and coefficient.

32. Three persons who are to pay amobyr: the person who shall give her; herself; and one of the three above mentioned.

33. There are three affiliations of a son: one is, that by his mother on her death-bed; affiliation by a father, or by a kindred, in the mother church; and the third, that by himself, if not attempted to be done by his mother while alive: if his mother, while alive, had striven to affiliate him as far as she could, and he was doubted; the law says, that he is not to be affiliated, nor are the kindred to receive him, for the law concluded that she knew that he was not a son to the supposed father, for she affiliated him not, seeing that he was doubted.

34. There are three receptions of a son: and one tongue denies and receives, that of the father himself; the second is, if the father be not alive, by a chief of kindred, with seven men of the kindred, in the place of a father; the third is, if there be neither father, nor chief of kindred to him, twenty-one men of the kindred deny and receive him, seven in the place of his father, seven in the place of a chief of kindred, and seven with a chief of kindred; and thus he is to be received, to be taken by the chief of kindred by the hand and given to the hand of the eldest man of the seven, and so from eldest to eldest to the

If there be a son by sufferance on a father's arddelw, and the mother does not affiliate him during that father's lifetime; the law says, the kindred are neither to receive him, nor deny him, for she suffered the period to elapse when she might have affiliated him if she willed, and, therefore, the law says, a son cannot be affiliated to a dead man, and remains on the privilege of a son denied by a father, but who could have been affiliated to another father if she willed, as she affiliated him not to him: if she had affiliated him to that father, whether bad, or good, the law says, that he is never to have any other father but that one; and for that the law says, a son cannot be affiliated to the dead.

35. Three men, who escape from execution, 'although guilty:' a tonsored clerk; and a youth, while on his father's privilege is not liable to dirwy, or execution, until his fourteenth year, for he is not of an age to be subject to the lord's law; his father, however, is to do right for him to the lord, and to the loser; and a 'foreigner cast ashore from a ship, until the end of three nights and three days, when he knows the law of the country, is only to return to the loser his property: a tonsored clerk is not liable to dirwy, or execution, for the first theft, only 'to be degraded, and left to' the privilege of a laic.

account of galanas-feud between them, is to name the two kin, the one killed, and the one that killed him; whoever shall will to object to a witness as of nearer relationship, is to bring witnesses of the same kindred, for a stranger is not to prove kin for any one, and he is likewise to state the relationship.

38. Three things which are not to be sworn to: flesh without the skin; silver without a vessel; and corn after separation from the sheaf: that is, if a man lose a live animal, and should find, in the place he might suspect, only the flesh, without head, skin, or feet; the law says, he is not to swear to it, for a man is not to swear to what he shall not see; the second is, silver without the vessel that a man may lose he is not to swear to, for all silver is alike, if he were to lose it in the vessel, he is to swear to the vessel; the third is, if a man should lose corn in the straw, the law says, he is not to swear to threshed corn, for a man is only to swear to the same that he shall lose.

39. Three pledges which never lapse: a harp; a yew pail; and a plume: if a man willingly give one of those three, it lapses like another pledge, for he himself degraded the privilege of his pledge; if the surety take it from him against his will, it lapses not until the end of a year and a day; it lapses to the claimant, however, at the end of the ninth day, for he is to have from the surety a legal pledge; the surety being answerable to the debtor for all.

40. There are three slip suretiships: the nature of a slip suretiship is, that one end is fast, and the other open and free: the first of them is, if a person buy any thing from another, and require surety for the property from the person who sold it, and he give it, and put his hand in the hand of the surety; and the person who required the suretiship do not come to take it from the hand of the surety, and to put his hand in the hand of the surety, only extending his hand towards the surety, and the surety towards him, and suppose that to be sufficient; the law says, that that suretiship is not binding on the needful day, for it was not legally taken; although a surety for the person who gave him by putting the hands together, yet not a surety to the person who did not take him by putting the hands together: therefore that is a slip sureti-ship.

41. The second is, if a person buy any thing from another, and require surety for that property, and the person say : ' I will give it ; ' and extend his hand towards the person whom he may give as surety, and he towards him, without putting their hands together ; and, after that, the surety join hands with the person who bought the property, and become surety to him ; the law there says, that he is a surety to the person who legally took him, and not a surety for him who illegally gave him ; and, as he cannot enforce his suretiship, let him endure the trouble which arises from that suretiship.

43. They are called three slip suretiships, because, like a buckle, they bind strongly when opposed, and, contrariwise, lose their hold, and, therefore, the binding is imperfect ; and where those suretiships exist, if opposed, they give way and do not bind.

44. Whoever may be surety for a person, if the payor do not pay on the appointed day, is to have fifteen days ; if he be surety for dead property ; and if the payor do not then pay, the surety has then thirty days ; and if the payor do not then pay, the surety has then fifty days ; and if the payor do not then pay, let the surety himself pay. If he be surety for live property, and the payor shall not pay on the appointed day, the surety has then fifteen days ; and if the payor do not then pay, the surety has then ten days ; and if the payor do not then pay, the surety has five days ; and if the payor do not then pay, let the surety himself pay. And when the surety shall meet the payor, let him strip off his clothes, with the exception of the garment next his skin : and let him always so do, until he shall get payment of the whole from him.

45. Whoever shall confess owing property to another, let him pay immediately, except at the three principal festivals : Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide : to wit, from Christmas eve, after vespers, until after mass on New Year's Day ; from Easter eve, after the resurrection, until after mass on little Easter Day ; from the Saturday in Whitsuntide, after vespers, until after mass on Trinity Sunday : for nobody is to ask another in those days.

46. Three cases in which a judge of a cymwd is to judge gratuitously : from one penny as far as four ; ebediw ; and camlwrw.

47. Three cases in which a person can cause a loss equal to ten pounds to another, for which there is no denial, nor payment : the first is, where a co-landed proprietor shall stop the mill stream of the other, from the refusal of compact, or unfriendliness of the owner of the mill, he being able to stop the water in his own property ; the second is, where a person shifts his corn from the stubble to the ley, and it be there damaged ; he is not, by law, to have redress ; the third is, if a person shall not fence his barn at the time he ought by law ; if his corn be damaged it is not to be compensated : for law is not due to him who does not conform to it.

48. Three things which do not need surety for their dilysrwydd : portion with a wife ; payment to the mediciner from the sick ; and gift to a man from his lord.

49. Three things a taeg is not to sell without the permission of his lord : honey ; swine ; and a stallion : some say, that if he sell them the bargain is to be returned, for they were unlawfully sold, and no illegal act is of force ; and now the law says, they are not to be returned, but if the aillt do wrong, the lord may punish him if he will.

1. And first, he required them to learn the three foundations of wisdom; those three are: filial juvenility, to learn; memory, to keep instruction; the sense of mature age to promulgate it: as a reason for that he gives a simile, the younger the rod is, the easier it is to be twisted, and to be extended, and to be turned to uses, and, if it grow to be large, it will sooner break than bend: in like manner, the younger a person when instructed, the softer will be his heart, and the easier it will be for him to receive instruction; but, if he be old, he will no more take notice of that instruction, than of other objects that he may see before him.

ii. Am y cof yreil grónóal yó er daet vo dysc dyn obydu dróc y cof mal difóyn yó idaó adysco; ac órth hynny ymae reit y cof ar dysc ygyt.

2. As to the memory, it is the second foundation: how ever good may be the instruction of a person, if his memory be bad, what he may learn becomes useless to him; and, therefore, it is necessary to have both memory and instruction.

3. The third is, what a person shall learn in youth, his memory being good, he ought not to promulgate, until he shall have attained sense, and age, and prudence: for it is the habit of the young to be inconstant and fickle; and the habit of the prudent to be constant.

There are five safeguards to the character of a judge.

4. The first is, the fear of God.

5. The second is, unconcern as to life, although alive to-day, thou knowest not whether thou shalt be alive to-morrow; and, therefore, thou oughtest to judge only righteous judgment.

6. The third is, equability; that is, what thou learnest, that it be learned equably.

7. The fourth is, frequent inquiry.

8. The fifth is, memory, to preserve the learning.

XI. [OF JUDGMENT.]

1. A judge is to hear fully; keep in memory; learn acutely; sum up fully; judge mercifully.

2. Three things a judge by privilege of land is to do before he shall judge: to wit, to hear the pleaders alternately until the close of the pleadings, and request of decision by both parties; the second is, to hear the parties contravening the judges, or objecting to them, for it is necessary for the undisputed judges to know whether the ones objected to, or contravened, are liable to the charges brought against them, and if not let them return to the judgment seat; the third is, to inquire the agreement of all the judges present, for it cannot be upheld as their act if there be difference.

3. If a judge pronounce a sentence without the agreement of all the judges present, let him be punished as the law willeth, that is, a camlwrw for breach of silence: and that judge is not to be in the judgment.

4. The time for mutual pledging as to a judgment is, when first given in the cause; to wit, before the commencement of another cause, and peaceable acquiescence.

5. Whoever shall neglect that time for mutual pledging, whether the suitor against the judgment, or the judge with his judgment, can never afterwards mutually pledge, according to law.

6. If a necessity for judging be cast on the judges by the absence of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff come before the judgment overtake him, and offer submission to impartial law; he is to lose nothing after that, for the privilege of his presence extinguishes the matter of the first judgment: for judgment of absence cannot be given in presence.

7. Three causes which a judge is to decide immediately : one is, a cause in which there may be mutual testifying ; the second is, to send interrogatories at the king's need ; the third is, to adjudge and sum up for a man to whom it may be due by law.

8. Every person is to be credited to his disadvantage, although not to be credited to his advantage.

9. Judgment is not to be given in the absence of a party, while any cause may be in progress in that court, because appearance is timely at any period while causes are proceeding, for it is a day for causes, and not part of a day : and if judgment be so given in the absence of a party, it is a wrong judgment, and void on account of the time ; and, therefore, there is a space of a year and a day from that day to doubt it.

10. At all times, if a claiming party be unprepared, and do not come when called, judgment is to be given, and that without entertaining the matter, as well after the cause is commenced as before : and in that way the neglect of the claiming party is of more consequence than that of the defending party, for to his neglect there pertains a distress on the first day.

11. *There are three kinds of neglect in presence : to wit, to give judgment against a person of loss, for which there may pertain to him the space of a year and a day to doubt it ; to wit, hindrance on the part of the men of the court, or judges, or others, of giving an immediate pledge against a judgment, and that contumacy is considered as oppression on the part of the judges ; or, failure by the lord of receiving a pledge, and that is considered as oppression on the part of the lord : and, therefore, he loses not his time in law, until the expiration of a year and a day from the period law shall be first allowed him, to doubt the judgment, or for his heir to complain by proving by the oath of a lord, or record of court, with the exception of the parties to the void judgment, in his father's time : and that is one of the cases where a lord is to swear as to his knowledge of the contumacy : and it is necessary for his judgment to be right and appropriate to the matter according to the pleadings in the cause.

12. The second contempt in presence is, to give an impertinent judgment upon a person 'in a bond of suit,' before calling on a cause.

13. The 'third contempt in presence is, a judgment of impertinent bond on a defending party in the same country, 'after the commencement of the cause,' to hear record and judgment, after request by both parties, 'after claim and answer: and that contempt presses on the claiming party, for it is certainly time for a judge to pass sentence, by law, after entertaining the cause, and request of decision by both parties: 'or giving judgment upon a person as to loss or gain before the commencement of the cause.'

14. There are 'three kinds of contempt in absence: to wit, if a person be deprived of his land¹⁰ by sentence' before mature time in law; for so long he is to be waited for by law: the second contempt in absence is, to give judgment upon a person as to loss, 'or gain,' before the commencement of the cause. The first contempt of the two is understood to be of untimeliness; ¹⁵the second is understood to be of 'timeliness' mixed ¹⁶with the matter,' for the sentence cannot be wholly doubted as to the matter without consideration as to the time: if after commencement of a suit ¹⁹judgment be given against a defending party, it would not be a contempt in absence, because the request would certify his presence. ²²The third contempt in absence is, to give judgment upon a person without his being called by the apparitor to the place to hear the record and judgment when pronounced, if he be near there, as in the area of the court: if he should be far, he ought to be waited for, until it be known whether he can be timely had, as if judgment were given upon a person within the time he ought to be waited for to know whether he timely appears: and that contempt, likewise, is understood to be of untimeliness.'

is not lost, in law, to doubt that decision, by being passive, until a year and a day have elapsed from the day of the wrong decision; nor against his heir if the litigation arise for land. And, if law be restricted on the part of the lord, so long as he is not righted he loses not his time, in law, to doubt it; unless by neglecting to proceed, when law is permitted him, until a year and a day have expired. And the time lapses not, likewise, to the person who shall commence the prosecution of a suit, if war occur before the termination of the litigation, unless from forgetfulness of a year and a day after peace shall be established, and knowledge of the lord who may reign.

16. The first decision is, judgment given against a party by a person not qualified for judging, either by privilege of land, or by privilege of office; or, by a person in holy orders, or professed; or, by a maimed person, or criminal; or, by a person with some natural disease; those circumstances divesting them of the qualification of 'a judge,' by law; or, by a judge against whom a lawful objection, or a lawful contravention, can be brought unsettled between him and the parties in the cause; or, after settlement, he being in the cause giving judgment; or, judgment given by a judge before the conclusion of the suit, and request by both parties; or, before it be given on the part of the lord, after request by both parties; or, hasty judgment given by a judge before asking the concurrence of his judges; or, judgment given by a judge upon a person contrary to law, by incitement on the part of the lord; or, seeking the advantage of a decision, constituting a judgment or arbitration as to proprietorship of land, decided independently of the act of a lawful session; unless in a case wherein the lord, of his own land, invest one of his men with proprietorship, either as a gift, or as any other favour: and this is the only instance whereby proprietorship of land can be confirmed to a person, independently of the act of a lawful session.

17. The second decision is, by substantiating against a judge, or some of his co-judges, one of the four causes for which judgment is to be reversed: to wit, hatred on account of any feud, which is, the being able to prove against a judge his having given a wrong judgment, or confirmed a

Whoever shall proceed, in the law of the court, against a judge for injury, by some one of the points mentioned above, is to obtain a record, or verdict, without delay, between him and the judge, or ⁷such of his co-judges, against whom the case shall be laid ; and if a record or verdict demonstrate that it is true what is said by him who is adducing proof against the judge, or his co-judges, let him who is found to be conducive to the breach of law be punished, in the manner that the law shall set forth ; and let there be a determination made anew in respect to the litigation, by law and equity.

authorized men, who shall be called on the part of the king, to decide the litigations in dispute between a pledge and counter-pledge, opposed to each other, which shall be deposited in the hand of the king; or, a questionable judgment pronounced upon a person, who cannot, according to law, give a pledge against a judgment; then the king is to transfer such litigation, and have it duly entered upon on an appointed day, fixed in law, in the presence of canonists, to make an unbiassed and everlasting termination, through the understanding of the canonists; and although a party doubt, and call for the decision made by the canonists, it is not received, nor heard according to law: for Howel the good, king of Cymru, by the counsel of his wise men and those in authority, inserted in his law the necessity and reception of canonists to regulate the peril and doubt of such said litigations, according to the sense of unbiassed canon; and that where his own authorities were not known to be able to make a proper due determination, according to his law, in the aforesaid circumstances.

19. There are three criminal ¹misplaints in law: the first is, if a person shall give a pledge against a judgment, which can be confirmed by a counter pledge through a written authority by law; such a one is to lose the worth of his tongue; the second is, if a person shall give a pledge against a judgment given for another person, otherwise than for himself; such a one is to be punished by a camlwrw; the third is, if a person shall give a pledge against a judgment, and does not possess the privilege of mutually pledging as to a judgment; such as a priest, or other religious: it is permitted, however, for a person so circumstanced, to oppose the judgment through authority and law; and, if he oppose and the authority fail him, he is to forfeit a camlwrw.

20. No one is to forfeit more than a camlwrw, where there shall be no mutual pledging, by the giving of a pledge and counter pledge.

neglect three summonses, is to be put in possession of the claim, to compel the defending party to a speedier answer : if the defending party come within the year to give security to abide law, by suretiship, or distress, he recovers possession : if he refuse, within the year, to give security to abide law ; the plaintiff, at the expiration of the year, is the true owner of the claim, by keeping a customary defence against the propriety of the defending party.

XII. THUS A LAWFUL SESSION IS TO BE HELD, ACCORDING TO THE MODE AND PRACTICE OF THE COMMON LAW OF CYMRU.

1. There is to be an appointed known day, and a known place named ; and then, on arriving at the lawful area, there is to be a sitting lawfully, as described by the law. The dimension of the area is a legal erw, and that in compass : and that is also the size of a churchyard burial-ground.

2. After lawfully sitting, the apparitor is to proclaim silence ; that is, to grant protection ; and forbid any one to break silence, or raise a tumult within the lawful area.

3. A breach of silence is, any one speaking a word of instruction to a plaintiff, or to a defendant, except the person appointed, and allowed to be a party in the suit, such as a pleader, or a guider to the party in the suit. The punishment for that breach of silence is a camlwrw to the king ; and the word to be nugatory to him who shall speak it, and to him on whose account it shall be spoken.

4. A tumult consists in fighting with arms, or wrangling, such as the speaking reproachful words by any one to another : a camlwrw is also the punishment of such a breach of law ; although the party to whom they are spoken shall have nothing.

5. There are three breaches of silence : to wit, the use of wrangling words by any one to another, in a church ; the second is, in a churchyard ; the third is, in a lawful session.

6. The second tumult is, fighting with arms, and unless it shall become an acknowledged fight, or blood dycing the king's land, within the area of the session ; a camlwrw is also the punishment, with reparation to the party, for the saraad and the injury ; and that without delay : because that every breach of law committed within the area of a session of law is to be adjusted before quitting the session.

7. If a person do saraad, or an injury to another, what injury soever it may be, if in defence against the one injured, or insulted, and the effect be similar to what was attempted to be inflicted on himself, he is not to make any reparation, by law, nor to suffer punishment on the part of the lord; for, it is a breach of law on the part of the first: and every one is at liberty, according to the law of Howel the good, to make a defence, in a similar mode and cause as he is attempted to be injured; and, therefore, there is not to be inflicted upon him either payment, or punishment, for doing what he is released from by law. And in a similar manner in respect to scandalous words spoken by one person to another; although the last should gainsay the first, no punishment is to be inflicted upon him by the lord, for speaking words similar to those spoken to him. The first only is to be punished by a camlwrw, as has been said above.

8. The third tumult is this: after arriving at the lawful area, should the men of the country disobey, by not attending to hold a session and pleas, in conjunction with those to whom they are bound to render such obedient service, as is pertinent for them to render to the king; to wit, by saying that they would not assist in holding pleas, or that they would not assist to make arrangements in respect to suits and presentments, as required of them to perform, in due time, on the behalf of the king. And although they should tender obedience after refusal, it is not to be received from them, without the permission of the king; because the first contempt and refusal were of higher consideration than the subsequent obedience. And if the president also should accept their obedience, and so hold a session and pleas, such service would be no security for them, or to the president; but they would remain liable to the same pains and penalties from the king, and that at the king's will; if it were pertinent for them seasonably to perform service of obedience to him by privilege of land, or privilege of office.

9. The time to commence holding the pleas of a lord is, when it is the forenoon of the day, and from that time to continue until the day shall be passing away; but pleas are not to be holden after it is become night; nor on the blank days; nor on a Sunday or holiday; nor on a Monday.

10. A just debt, without bond, and without proof for it; the law says, that there is only the oath of one person required for it.

11. Whoever shall deny saraad, without blood, or wound; let him deny it upon his own oath, against the word of the other.

1. When Howel the good, king of Cymru, modified the laws of Cymru, he permitted various privileges to various persons of his kingdom. And, in the first place, he permitted every ecclesiastical lord, such as the archbishop of Menevia, or other bishops and abbots, royal privilege for holding pleas among their laics, by the common law of Cymru. And, likewise, he permitted every chief, to whom there might belong a cymwd, or cantrev, or more, to hold a daily royal court of privileged officers, in number as he should deem proper, in a similar manner to himself; and privilege to hold a royal court of pleas in his country, among his uchelwrs. And he permitted every uchelwr 'to hold' his own land according to its privilege, and to rule his bondmen according to conditional ¹bondage in South Wales, and perpetual bondage in Gwyned. The king's villains are to be regulated according to the privilege and law of the taeog-trev in which they may dwell, and that according to bond service 'and bond rent.' And, likewise, he allowed to every one without land or office the natural privilege he was born with.

And, on that account, those disputes are to be determined before the judge of the king's supreme court.

XIV. OF SUITS OF COURT AND CHURCH.

1. If a man of a court sue a man of a church; let him sue in the church.

2. If a man of a church sue a man of a court; let him sue in the court.

3. Hence a man of a court is not to carry his suit to the church, more than a man of the church to the court: because the sword enforces the rights of the crozier.

4. However there have been seven precedences established for the church as the chief, against the court: those seven are, tithe; ¹¹offering; daered; ²communion of the dead; altar spoil; saraad to a graduate; open violence against a clergyman: for each of those, a man of a court is to make amends to a man of a church at his church.

5. There is one precedence to a church, in opposition to a privileged court; priority of meering, if it have a crozier and gospel: for land and soil this precedence is for the church.

XV. [OF CONVENTIONAL SESSIONS.]

1. Three conventional sessions were established by the law of Howel the good, that there might be no kind of defect in the law, nor any lack of worthiness, or of equity; and the privilege of judges was not conferred upon any such conventional men, either by privilege of land, or by privilege of office; for when the men of that court should have concluded the consideration of a record, and confirmed its form, by oaths ²⁹of elders, in what had been delegated to them, then it is requisite for the judge appointed on the part of the king, to give judgment between the litigants according to the form prescribed by the men of that court, when admitted on every part, without being either legally objected to or contravened. That is, that when there shall happen to be contention concerning land between several lordships, such as cymwds, or cantreys, whether they belong to ³⁴'the king,' or other lords, laical, or clerical, who hold their lordships under the sovereignty of of the king, ³⁸that kind of session is to be held on the part of the king; for, by the privilege of the king, a court of that kind is peaceably constituted according to law. The manner of that is, the king is lord over all of his kingdom, although not any one of the other lords is lord over the other; therefore, it was understood, according to law, that no one could hold a court of that kind but the king; and, therefore, it is required, on behalf of the king, that, by summons and notice, there should be convoked the authorities ¹of the wise, from the canghellor-ships of every part, of such as were the most talented, to the debating place; and that in the days and terms of the law; so that an explanation should take place, in respect to any cause of contention, whether between a court and a church, or cymwds and cantrevs. Or, that any one holding land, by a deed, from the king, whether to himself, or to one of his ancestors, and some one else should come to sue for that land, saying, that when that land was taken, that he, or one of his ancestors, should say, that it was through oppression and illegality he had been dispossessed; or, that one should come to demand the land on account of a deed, obtained from the lord of the land, whether he, who was proceeding, or one of his ancestors, obtained the land, and the right had accrued to him thereby; and that some one held that land by possession, or by other means than he ought to do so. ²And those two matters³ are to be held in a conventional court, and there determined; for it has not been established, that any one who should be holding land by a deed, under a right of the lord, in whatever mode he might have obtained it, whether by purchase, or gift, or by any other favour, should answer in a court of pleas of a cymwd, or a cantrev, either by record, or by verdict, such as a breyr, or other; since it has not been established in the law ⁴of Howel⁵ that the right of the lord should be determined in such a court. If the conventional court make it manifest, that oppression has been committed, as has been mentioned above, it is incumbent upon the king, without delay, to repair the illegality; for, according to law, a deed illegally done is not to be upheld. If a man in possession cannot illegalize the deed, nor question the right of the lord, from whom the land was obtained, the judge is to adjudge the land to the owner of the deed, as the deed shall best set forth; and what he shall find of moveable property upon the land he is securely to own.

2. The second is, that a plaint of galanas cannot be prosecuted, except in the presence of the king, or whoever shall hold a court instead of the king; for power has not been conceded to any one to compel full retribution for galanas, but to him who should be lord over all, that is the king: because it does not accord, by law, to sue from court to court, in pursuit of the same matter; therefore, that cause is to go to a conventional court. A third of every galanas, of which the king shall compel payment, is awarded to him, in lieu of punishment, for enforcing the other portion for the kindred, as the law shares among them.

3. The third conventional session is, where there shall be a dispute amongst men of authority, concerning the import of two laws, opposed to each other, deciding the same thing, without any one giving credit to the explanation given by another; or that they know not which of those two laws is the most preferable. Then it is incumbent, on behalf of the king, by a warning citation, to urge the canonists, whether men under religious vows, or other ecclesiastics, to ¹⁸determine that cause of dispute, by the sense of unbiassed canon, and confirmed by oath, if there be who shall doubt; and then it is incumbent on the judge, on behalf of the king, to pronounce judgment, according to the form of the canonists. Dewi of Brevi !

4. Or, by one person pursuing a plaint against many, or against one person; or, by one person against another, where an upright judge cannot be obtained, without being a party to the dispute: those three cases, likewise, are carried on in the conventional court. Or, by one lord proceeding against another lord, holding their lordships under the king; or, by a man proceeding against a lord for unlawful acts, that he had committed against him; or, satisfaction for galanas between two kindreds: those disputes were appointed to be determined there, lest it should happen that the kindred of the slayer, or of the slain, should be in different lordships; since a plaint for galanas cannot be pursued, except in the presence of the king, or whoever shall be in the place of the king; because the power to compel full proceedings, on account of galanas, has been delegated only to whoever should be lord over the whole, and that is the king: for it is not regular to complain from one judicature to another for the same matter; and, therefore, this dispute was transferred to the conventional court. And agreeably thereto, a third of the galanas was assigned to the king, for enforcing the other portion to the kindred, in the manner that the law shares it among them.

5. The second kind of conventional suits is, where a plaintiff, or a defendant, doubts a decision made by authorized functionaries, who are called forward on the part of the king, calling it a wrong decision; and one of them, or more, being one of the four causes for the reversal of judgment; or, the decision being inappropriate, according to law, which they shall make; since, according to law, it cannot be called in question, but as coinciding with one of the four causes, or more. If they deny their being concerned in those causes with which they are charged; then it is requisite, on the part of the king, to convoke wise men from their canghellor-ships, from all parts, to investigate whether the functionaries say truly or falsely; and those of persons allowed by both parties. If they be found to be concerned, or their decision inappropriate, in law, let it be set aside, without further punishment; since it has not been established, in the law, that there should be a mutual pledging against such functionaries; because such decision has not the privilege of a judge, but sufferance only, without being called in question, as has been mentioned before. And then it is incumbent upon the king to appoint a supreme judge, to put an everlasting termination to the dispute by a judgment. No dispute, which is required in law to be determined by the judgment of the supreme judge, shall revert to the court of either a cymwd, or a cantrev, unless the party commence anew with his plaint.

claim beyond a year, and the like ; and that is a bar to gain until a fixed time. Dewi of Brevi, ora !

3. There are three kinds of bars to a suit : one of them is, if a person should demand land of another, by plaint and claim, tracing a descending right to himself from any one of his ancestors ; or to collaterals, on account of co-inheritance, although the land had not been derived by right of ancestors ; and the respondent being able to prove against the claimant, that the right had departed from them, by incontrovertible law ; and that it had also, by incontrovertible law, descended to one of his ancestors ; from whom he should be able to derive ¹unextinguished right down to himself, or to a co-inheritor, although an advenient person, whether himself, or a stranger, had the land from him, so as he should be able to plead in their right ; or time to mutually pledge as to judgment.

4. The second bar is, a respondent being able to advance against a claimant, who shall ¹assert a right, on the part of ancestors, or co-inheritor, or in his own nature, or in whatever other manner, the extinguishment of the right, by the pleadings of an original ¹suit and judgment in the person of him, on whose behalf he may ¹assert a right, to ²'his party,' or to his co-inheritor, by finding any one of his ancestors to have had wrong possession ; or, a respondent being able to confirm an older possession in his own nature, which is attempted to be made ³ wrong possession, than that asserted by the claimant ; as if a person receive possession of land, that is, through investiture by a lord, and afterwards, some one else should come, in his absence, into court, and receive inefficient investiture of the same land, from the hand of the president, and in consequence till the land during that wrong possession ; the first can oust him, whenever he will, within a year and a day ; and although the other may complain against him, concerning that ⁴wrong possession, he cannot gain a verdict against him : for every possession commixt with the right is stronger than a possession without right : and that the law considers the condition of the eldest, as to possession, the most just, until it be extinguished by law and judgment; and such as those above are held to be an eternal bar; the possession happening, by pleading face to face with the complaining party, to the defending party, through "the illegality of the claiming party." Or, being able to advance against a plaintiff the bar of lives of ancestors, in any session of a cantrev or a cymwd: for, whoever shall be holding, whether an unrecognized person of the blood whence the right accrued because of long abeyance; or a stranger shall receive it, after the right shall have been gained, through the periods of the three lives, for to such the law is unrecognized, like as to such as may be derived of the blood, "who could not" be proved to be a wrong possessor against him to whom the right accrued. And that pleading is not pertinent against that wrong possessor, except where any one of the old proprietors shall press for possession, by saying, in his defence, that the inheritance did not fall to him from the one who shall avouch; and in that manner question the ownership entirely, where it shall fail him to derive a right upon similarities. XVII. [OF A SUIT FOR LAND AND SOIL.]

1. Whoever willeth to prefer a claim for land and soil, is to sue in one of these six ways: kin and descent; propriety; dadenudd; purchase; hire; and loan. And, by one of three ways, he is to be answered: and those three are, denial; acknowledgment; and lawful arddelw.

2. If he willeth to claim by propriety; it is right to give him the land, unless he lose through bad proceeding at law.

3. If by kin and descent he claim, it is not incumbent to answer him, until the elders of the country shall ascertain his kin and descent, and until they shall swear thereto, as being right and just; and, unless they swear that, the law is to be shut against him, until they do swear. If they swear, the defendant is to produce a lawful arddelw, if he have it: either intervention in a common country; or car-departure: or any other lawful arddelw, if there be any, against the plaintiff, so that he should not be entitled to be heard. And being able to prove such arddelw by respectable witnesses, who can neither be objected to, nor doubted, the law then becomes shut to the plaintiff, unless he can have it opened for him; and, in that case, the plaintiff is to show his claim; and the defendant is to show his defence, either denial, or acknowledgment: and this is called truth and law. On that day one loses his claim, and the other obtains it; and on that day they are to give pledges for 'family peace. And if one of them, on claim and answer between them, shall testify against the other, and the witnesses bear their testimony honestly, and that they can neither be objected to, nor doubted; the judge is to decide such testimony to gain, and the other to lose. If witnesses can be objected to, that party is decided to lose, and the other to gain. If neither of them fail, either in word, or in testimony, let it be shared between them: and this is the third case where the law shares.

If he claim by exchange, and he should say, that he gave value for the land; the son of him who exchanged it may take the land back, by repaying the value: because chattels are perishable, and every land is eternal; and what is eternal is not to be given for what is perishable: and, therefore, land is neither to be given nor exchanged for chattels.

6. If he willeth to claim by hire; he is to prove the hire, and to prove, by respectable witnesses, that he has an interest in the land; and, unless the defendant can gainsay him, the land is to be given to the plaintiff; but, if he be able, it pertains to him to swear for the land; because to him belongs the conservancy.

7. If he willeth to claim by loan; the plaintiff is to show that the land came to him as his due, and that it came to him in quantity and share, along with his coholders of land, and that they had from him a side and gable for that land; and that he has respectable witnesses, who know of his having enjoyment and possession of the land during year and years; and that it has not departed from him, either by gift, or for price, or for worth, or by any claim in court, but by loan; and as every loan is to be restored in the same state to the lender, it is right that should. 'And if the plaintiff can prove that, he is to have the land ⁴by returning to' the defendant his land if he will; and if the plaintiff cannot prove that, the defendant is to keep the land, for he is a guardian, or conservator. court to his own territory, of the three high courts aforesaid, every claim and demand that may be against him.

10. Although a lord can be a plaintiff in his own court, against whomsoever he may will, he is not, according to law, to be a defendant in his own court, to any kind of demand that may be against him; since it is not meet for him to stand before a judge of his own court; and it is not meet also to sue him, in his own court, for any kind of claim that may be against him.

11. No judge, likewise, according to law, is to give judgment, without there being two parties present, as mentioned above; to wit, a recognized plaintiff, claiming and proceeding; and a recognized defendant, defending; and the lord of the common weal, hearing.

12. If a person cast a stone over a house, or a weapon, and it fall upon the head of a person, or animal; if the person be killed, his saraad is not to be paid, but his galanas is: his saraad is not paid, because it was not done advertently, and saraad is only paid for disgrace. His galanas is paid, because it is a loss, and there is no loss but which is to be compensated; and, therefore, it is said: redress wittingly what thou dost unwittingly: and that is one person killed without saraad. If it fall upon an animal, surreption is not paid for it, but compensation to the owner for his loss; as it was not done with a wrong intent. And those are called inadvertent casts.

13. There is one advertency, and two advertencies: one is to be repaired in part; another is to be repaired in full; another is not to have any reparation made for it. Of the inadvertency we have spoken above; and the two advertencies are these: in what a person may do for good to another, although harm may come to another thereby, he is not to be questioned; the other is, where a person endeavours to save the life of another, and who, from that act should die; no reparation is to be made: for with an intention of good it was done, and not with an intention of harm. Another of them is, what a person may do with a design of harm, and harm come of it, such as the killing of a person designedly; then there is to be paid, first the saraad, and afterwards the galanas; and, for that, complete reparation is to be made. And those are denominated, in law, two advertencies and ¹⁰one inadvertency.

14. There are three errors in law : an undefined claim ; an incomplete ¹denial ; and an incongruous record.

15. There are three persons, against whom, according to law, no one is to be received, or heard, preferring any complaints in an established session of law, as the pleas of the king ; and the law as to contempt is not to affect them, in any matter or cause, on the day when they may be called. The first is, a man who goes with the king's army upon service for land that is held under the king ; for the highest service attached to land is military service, when required : or a person who has been given as hostage to another country, by the consent of country and lord, as a security for preserving peace between lordships and chieftains ; and, therefore, it is right, according to law, to keep every thing belonging to such persons in the same state as if they were present, whether moveable property, or immoveable property ; for they were at the need and in the service of the king ; and, therefore, it is incumbent to uphold their condition without prejudice, on behalf of the king, until they return from that required service.

16. The second is, a person who might chance to commit some act, so as not to be able to obtain the communion of the church of God, until he obtained absolution from the pope : if, after setting out upon his pilgrimage, a claim should be preferred against him, the plaintiff is not to be heard, nor is his application for proceedings at law to be countenanced, until a year and a day shall have elapsed, from the day it was ascertained that the pilgrim had departed from that canghellor-ship ; since it is not right, according to law, to disturb the condition, or possession, of a person who might be constrained to seek ²customary remission of a deed, ³committed within' the period when he might return.

17. The third is, one who is bed-ridden from any natural disorder, or a blow, or a bruise, or a wound ; the testimony of a mediciner, or a confessor, is to be credited, in that case, swearing, that the sick person could not without peril come to abide the law. And here are the three cases, wherein it is not required, on behalf of the lord, to compel the judge to judge in the absence of a party, as guilty of contempt; nor to countenance the application of a plaintiff as to the possession of any one of those individuals; because those points are to be recognized and public among the judges; for public testimony is credible, in common law, in those cases. And here are the three instances, where pleading in absence for parties is to be heard by the president and judges. And these are the cases where a lord is to suspend the law immediately, without listening to the application; nor 'is a judge' to interfere by an act of law in the aforesaid points.

18. Law is, a channel of equity between a plaintiff and a defendant and a lord.

19. There are three channels in law: one is, a channel to preserve honesty; the second is, a channel to strengthen equity; the third is, a channel to clear truth: those three are: a lord; a surety; and a worthy judge between parties.

20. The lord is represented by the steward, or chief of the household, if he be not himself present, or such as he shall appoint in his place: for these have the authority of investing, and receiving; and whatever they may do is to be enacted by the judge, from their order, in giving judgment, and in deciding litigations, by law.

21. If there be various innate complaints, against one person, for one thing, whether for land and soil, or other thing; as a complaint of kin and descent, or dadenudd, or wrong possession; the complaint first advanced is to be first determined, and thence the complaints in succession are to be determined: and, in like manner, if there be various personal complaints, against one person, for one thing, the one first advanced is to be first determined: a personal complaint is, an agreement of contract, or other private bond made by one person with another.

22. If there be various complaints, against one person, for one thing, as an innate complaint and a personal complaint; the innate complaint is to be first determined: for, whenever an innate complaint and a personal complaint occur together, the innate complaint wholly destroys the personal complaint.

23. There are three persons who can be objected to for the same causes: to wit, galanas; and woman-feud; and land-feud: a witness; an evidence; and a lawful informer.

24. Three persons, although they may answer through denial, are not to give a fixed raith, unless there be a counter-oath against them: to wit, a surety; a contract-man; and an informer.

25. Three things in which an advocate is not to plead for another person: one is, giving a pledge against judgment; the second is, to plead for another person's guarantor; the third is, to plead for a person in peril of life and body and limbs.

26. There are three persons liable to suretiship to a lord, although there may be no plaint, by a party, against them: one is, a person who shall threaten the body of another, "if the object swear upon the relic to the threat; and witnesses are not to be adduced to a threat, because, if they be objected to, the person is not more secure from the threat than before; the second is, a person who shall say that he has received personal injury, and shall refuse the right he is to have by law; the third is, a session man who shall be in a country longer than three days and three nights without giving his fealty to a lord, or to a breyr.

27. Every kind of person who shall prefer a plaint of threat as to life and body or limbs, or property, against another, by oath on a relic, is to have sureties for his security.

28. No kind of compact avails without a session to impede the termination of pleadings by an act of session, where an everlasting termination, or a termination for a time, shall not be avouched; as compact, by law, does not accord with that kind of suit.

29. Every personal bond is available which may be pertinent to the suit, as the privilege of a contract, or suretiship as to a bargain; or evidences where proper, that is, in every case, except a suit for land and soil in which there occurs an innate claim, for it is not accordant to restrict the force of an innate right to the object of gaining an ownership, or possession of land by contract, longer than the space of four years.

30. If any one suppose that a plaint is of no effect that is not preferred on the day the matter of plaint arises; the law says, that every plaint is effective that shall be preferred within a year and a day, except for fighting, or saraad.

31. The law says, that from the birth of a son until his fourteenth year the father is to have the effects of the son if he die; for, during that space, he is on his father's privilege; and thenceforward he is on the privilege of his lord, and the lord takes him as a son; and, if he die, receives his property, unless he leave a son.

32. If a youth kill a person, or injure his limb, or do wrong; he is to pay for the injury, with the exception of saraad; for he is not accounted to do, or receive saraad; and he is not liable to dirwy until fourteen years of age: and the law does not adjudge him liable to execution until he may be fourteen.

33. There are two interventions in the law of Howel: to wit, an intervention in a country, and one out of a country; and in one, law closes between a person and his claim, and in the other, does not: an intervention in a country closes between a person and his claim, so that he is not to be answered as to that claim: it is called an intervention, because thickets intervene between a person and his claim, so that he is never to be answered.

34. There are three acknowledged surreptions, for which neither dirwy, nor camlwrw is due, only reparation to the owners: one is, if two persons have property in common, and the person in possession destroy it without a cross, without forbidding; the second is, if a person take another person's horse to hasten to warn a country of the approach of an enemy; the third is, if a person take another person's horse to hasten to fetch a priest to the sick, lest he depart without communion.

35. Three places where a twofold camlwrw is paid: one is, when tongue-wound shall be paid to the king; the second is, when a person shall approach the judges when deliberating, without leave, if the lord be present; the third is, when a person shall be summoned against another to submit to examination, and he and the plaintiff come into court before the lord, and the plaintiff recede from his plaint, the person complained against offering to

36. There are three faultless pursuits : pursuit of a plaint unto bond ; pursuit of a bond unto ³pleading ; and pursuit of a pleading unto ⁴judgment ; and pursuit of judgment unto determination.

37. Three persons who are to have moveable goods and moveable property, upon the death of their owner, by the law of heirship ; and no one of them can be compelled to be a party to hold by the law of heirship : to wit, an aillt of the king, or of a breyr, whom the law calls a proprietary alltud, or who shall remain with his lord, without removal, unto the fourth person on each side ; the second is, the king, when he shall obtain the inheritance of the property of his aillt, who may die without an heir of his body ; the third is, when it may happen for a breyr to succeed, by the law of heirship, in a similar manner, to the property of his aillt, who may die without an heir of his body.

38. No one can be compelled to become a party to pay a debt for another, by the law of heirship, or co-heirship, unless there shall descend or devolve to the heir, or co-heir, a natural right, on the part of his ancestors, or co-heir ; and, on that account, an alltud, who is called an aillt, is not to pay the debt of his ancestors, or co-heirs, since he does not obtain a natural title, on their part, to a descended or devolved right.

39. No one can be compelled to become a payer on account of a person who may die before the payment of his debt, excepting three persons : to wit, a heir who shall obtain a natural title, on the part of a father ; the second is, a surety ; the third is, a co-heir, who shall obtain a natural title on the part of another co-heir.

40. No one is to be executed, in whose possession hooved animals are found, although his guarantor be dead, or he cannot find him ; if he can exculpate himself, by verdict of country, that he stole not the property.

41. Whoever damages himself, or his heir, either in moveable, or immoveable property such as land, whilst a youth under fourteen years ; or a sick person, or a drunken person : no kind of defence will avail against them, when they come, ³²as perfect plaintiffs, to renew that suit, before a judge ;

nor against their heirs, if the litigation be concerning land. For such a youth is to be considered under two periods of life: when within seven years of age he is not to be a party answerable to any one, but to three pleas: of damage he causes to another, exclusive of saraad; and of land, which he shall gain from another place; and of land, which shall be claimed for him by dadenhudd, and by kin and descent; and that by his having a faithful fosterer, given to him by a lord, after the death of his father; and then he is first competent to swear. Another period of age to a youth is, when he is fourteen years old; and then he is first competent to give, and to sell, property moveable and immoveable; and then he becomes a person of full age, to stand to the law and judgment of the session, according to the common law of Cymru. Dewi of Brevi!

42. There are three suits not found in the law of Howel: one is, a suit on behalf of a plaintiff who shall lapse into a faulty word, or uncertainty, or lapse of time; the second is, a suit on behalf of a defendant, in a similar manner; the third is, where a person makes an arddelw in a suit not acknowledged in law, according to the nature of pleading in a suit.

43. If an officer make an innovation, in the country of the king, for deciding litigations, or judgments in the pleas of the king, such as altering the king's law, the country is not to receive it; for no one has the privilege of making a law, or of altering it, but the king, with the concurrence of the people of his kingdom. And, if the law were altered, it would be necessary to know and understand that the law introduced was more perfect than the one which had been annulled. If the president were to establish it against consent, it would be oppression, on the part of the lord; and there would be no termination to any kind of litigation, by the decision formed from that kind of regulation, because it would be contrary to law; and nothing can be established which is made contrary to law; and there is no termination but a lawful termination. If, with the concurrence of the country and its officers, a privileged law were altered, they would be at the will of the king, with all his exerted power: for that point is considered equal to the divesting the king of his kingdom, when the law is altered without his consent.

[ADDITIONAL LAW.

I. MISCELLANEOUS.]

1. Three persons who hold land, and receive it in the court of a cymwd, or cantrev, and who are not to be parties to answer to any one for their lands upon any complaints, nor to be judicial judges, by privilege of land, like breyrs: to wit, a clergyman, to whom the king shall grant land by deed, being his own undisputed property; the second is, a laic, to whom the king shall give land, whether as a gift, or as any other favour, in a similar manner; the third is, a person who shall hold the possession of taeog-land under the king: the first and the second are to answer before the chief judge, if there be any to question them, and not in the baronial court; the third is to answer in the court of the taeog-trev, and not in the court above.

2. If there be an appointed day, between a plaintiff and a defendant, to answer concerning land and soil, and the defendant shall not answer within the term of the day, the defendant is to be deprived of the land; for no one is to hold land, which he shall not answer for in due time: because the law says, that any untimely answer will neither stand, nor avail any one.

3. An owner of land, having no heir of his body, can appropriate his land to whomsoever he may will. If there be an heir, however, to an owner of land, he cannot do so; for the owner of land cannot disinherit his heir, nor assign his land to any one, without the consent of his heir, except for their joint interest, to wit, during his own time; or through his being pressed by one of the imperative necessities, which free a person's selling his land without the consent of his heir: such as the necessity for meat and drink; or for money to pay his debt.

4. A debt left by the owner of land unpaid, falls upon the heir, to be paid to whom it may be due; to wit, an heir who may acquire a natural title after him.

5. No one hereditarily is to pay a debt for his ancestors, but a person who shall obtain an inheritance of land, through right and title, on the part of his ancestors; such as a person who may obtain the land of his father, or grandfather, or great grandfather; or a person who may obtain the land of his co-heir, who might die without an heir of his body; and that by demanding it on the part of his ancestors, if he should be nearest of kin to him.

6. The ancestors of a person are, a father, a grandfather, and a great grandfather. Co-inheritors are, brothers, cousins, and second cousins.

7. No one is heir of a person, but such as shall proceed from his body; and, therefore, a person obtains not the land of his co-heir who may die without heir of his body; and he pays no part of his debt, except in respect to the land which he may obtain on the part of the holder, who had been upon the land of one of his ancestors before him.

8. There are three kinds of conservators of land, according to law: one is, the lord is the conservator of land, which shall fall into his hand by the death of the owner, until the rightly-entitled come to demand it; the second is, a co-inheritor, who shall conserve the due of his co-inheritors, until they shall come to take their right due; such as brothers, or cousins, or second cousins; for those are co-inheritors; the third is, a person to whom conservancy land is consigned by the owner, under an agreement to have his land and his privilege back when he will.

9. No one is to forfeit life who comes into court, upon whom property wrongfully obtained shall be found, although his guarantor be dead, or cannot be found; if he shall be able, by a verdict of the country, to exculpate himself.

10. Every cause is private, not comprehended in the nature of the law of regulated days, as far as the ownership of land and soil, and that falls into the general law.

11. Every expression of ambiguous signification is to be explained by the speaker; excepting where he shall deny possession of the property of another person by deceitful words.

12. If a man feed a person who is banished by the sentence of the law, or who is food-forbidden by the injunction of the lord; some say, he is liable to a dirwy; the law, however, says, that he who shall feed him is only liable to a camlwrw.

13. The age at which a person is to be appointed a judge, is twenty-five years; because he is not perfect in understanding and learning, until he has a beard, and no one is a man until the growth of the beard; and it is not becoming to see a youth judging an old man.

14. If a judge be appointed to pass sentence, and, before pronouncing the judgment, the party come, and offer himself to immediate law ; and the president, or the party, seek the benefit of the judgment ; the benefit of the judgment is not to be granted : for a judgment of absence cannot be pronounced upon one who is present, the privilege of his presence extinguishing the force and matter of the judgment, and opening for him the law with time ; since a termination has not occurred to debar him, before he came into the area of the court : and, if he should be debarred from law on that day, he becomes released from the claim and the demand ; and a camlwrw is to be imposed upon the plaintiff for faulty proceeding.

15. There are three things which a surety cannot obtain for a foreign party : one is, defence against obligation ; the second is, deferring of the day of record ; the third is, pleading in law for a party that ought not.

16. A thief who shall put himself upon sureties is not to forfeit his life, according to law.

17. It is needful for any one that shall prosecute a claim, that four things be in his claim : a knowledge of whom he shall claim ; and what he shall claim ; and how much he shall claim ; and for what he shall claim ; and that in time.

18. There are three superior plaints : one is, a plaint for land by kin and descent ; the second is, a plaint for mutually pledging as to judgment ; the third is, a plaint of galanas.

19. There are three kinds of ownership of land, according to law : one is, investiture without occupation ; the second is, occupation without investiture, the third is, occupation and investiture.

20. Three members that are to make amends for a person, and to receive it, although he may not have an acknowledged lord : a father ; a brother ; and a father-in-law.

21. If there be a disagreement between judges as to their record, or as to their judgment, and two parts confirm their ordinance by oath, in opposition to the third ; the law says, that the ordinance of the two parts is more lawful than that of the third : for the two parts are to lead the third in every case.

22. There is no private personal regulation, which one person makes with another, that shall impede a pleading in court ; except where it shall happen for time to lapse, or the suit had previously terminated.

23. The law says, that where the basis of the suit is defended all the branches are dead.

II. IN THE SEQUEL SUCH LITIGATIONS ARE TREATED OF, AS MAY ARISE BETWEEN TWO CROZIERS, AND CONTENTION CONCERNING MEERING.

1. Whether they be bishops, or abbots, or other ecclesiastical persons, the highest in privilege has the right of meering to the other, if they have co-equal conservancy; and, if they have not, he who has had the longest conservancy, whether of an abbacy, or of a bishopric, has the priority of meering; only, let no one of them go beyond any of the three stays of boundary towards the other: which are, principal waters; a lawful randir; and a dwelling. If they have co-equal conservancy, there is to be an equal sharing between them, according to the law of equality. And those litigations are to come before the judge of the supreme court for decision and judgment.

2. If the lord seek to compel laics belonging to the abbot to join the army, who have not investiture of land within his dominion, nor belong to his household by service, nor one of the royal officers, in offices of the daily court; they are exempt from military service, by law. The way of that is, the land of the abbot is frank-almoign land, and is not liable to military service by privilege of land; and they being also conventional car-fitting men from that land upon the expiration of terms. For, there are three kinds of services attached to land: military service; courts; and convention: and military service is not required, by law, but from a privileged man, or a household man of the lord, or the officers of the supreme court of the lord; for such one is the third person who can be pleaded for in his absence, according to law, so that there should be nothing lost of his moveable, or immovable property, although he come not to the court on the day of call; and such one is a person who joins the army by the privilege of service attached to land: for the chief service attached to land is the military service of the lord the king. And should it be asked, on the part of the lord, to whom do those men belong: they are men standing upon a conventional title, who have the law of kindred for obtaining sarnad and galanas, if they be unlawfully killed, they, and every person not upraised by privilege of land, or regal office. Conventional bondmen and alltuds can be sold by their lord, and given, by law; and amends are not to be made for them, if they be unlawfully killed; because they have no kindred who can demand it.

LAWS, II.

III. IN THE SEQUEL IS TO BE EXPLAINED THE LAW CONCERNING THOSE RELIGIOUS MEN WHO DEVOTE THEMSELVES TO THE DISCIPLINE OF THEIR LORD ABBOT.

1. For every breach of law, which religious men shall, by hand and foot, commit, for which they are liable to forfeiture of life, or to be sold, or to a dirwy, or to a camlwrw; the abbot has a right, according to law, to remove them from the court of the lord to his own chapter. For, the chapter of the abbot is the third lawful chapter; for the law says, that no ecclesiastical person, graduated in consecrated orders, or in other religious community, can be compelled to answer to any one, out of his synod, if charged with any bad act.

2. This is the distinction, according to law, between a man who is a professed religious, and another ecclesiastic: a professed man cannot warrant in any suit for another; nor divest himself of his religious garments; nor resign himself to the law of the secular court; for he cannot remove a suit from the session of the lord to the chapter of the abbot. For, there are two deaths, death in law, and a natural death: death in law is, as it is said of those who shall have devoted themselves to the discipline of the abbot, and are indissolubly united to religion; their privilege is extinguished and perished in the secular law, so that no want of privilege can affect them; a natural death is, when the soul shall be separated from the body.

3. If there be complaints and claims against such men for any dues, none of them can be compelled to answer, before judges, on account of any personal engagement; such as a suretiship, or a contract, or as evidences, or other adjustment of personal due. For, there are certain persons who are exonerated from such obligations: such persons as are bound and consecrated, in the nature of piety and privilege; and a person who is entitled, according to law, to the privilege of sovereignty; and those the law shall separate from the privilege of person that is connected with them, so that the bond of self-participation shall suffer them in no way to be compelled to abide a suit of personal obligation, or promise, as it has been said above, in the case where, according to law, a sovereign cannot be made a party to the matter. Those are, professed men, or canonists, under the obligation of religion; for the privilege of the abbot's supremacy abrogates their privilege, so that they cannot be a party to the suit. Another personal obligation, or vow, is that of a woman, over whom there shall be a dominating rod, by the privilege of marriage ; for the privilege of the husband's supremacy abrogates her privilege, so that she shall not be able to make any kind of personal obligation, or promise. And, on that account, they, or persons in similar condition, cannot be compelled to be a party to any obligation of that kind.

4. Three persons whom the law wills not to be sold : a thief, if there shall be the worth of four legal pence confessedly found in his hand ; a waylayer of his master ; and a traitor to his lord.

5. Three persons against whom singly no complaints can be prosecuted : a monk without his abbot ; a wife without her husband ; and a son under age without his father, or guardian, whilst answerable for him.

6. If there be a contention, who is to be guardian of a heir, before attaining age, whether the kindred of the father, or the kindred of the mother ; the law says, that he should be a man on the part of his mother ; for fear lest one of the kindred of the father should betray him for his land, or poison him.

7. There are three secure properties without surety : one is, property given to his man by a lord, to whom it was due from another, by law ; the second is, property, which a wife shall obtain from her husband as wyneb-werth, when he shall have connexion with another woman ; the third is, property taken, or obtained, in a war between two lords.

8. Three persons who hold land in the king's court, and who receive it from the king, if the land descend to them according to right of inheritance, and who are not required to perform any of the three kinds of service to the lord, that are attached to land, except paying his rent and his gwestva : a widow ; a youth under age ; and a scholar graduated in consecrated orders : because it is requisite for a man to have a wife ; and the youth requires the authority of discretion and supervision ; and the scholar has no worth set on his tongue, in law, and no one is qualified to judge, except under the penalty of the worth of his tongue.

9. Three persons, of whom no one is to stand in judgment : one of them is, a person deranged by insanity, and who is required to be bound or watched at times ; the second is, a person who once shall buy himself for confessed theft, or who shall be detected as a thief during public peace ; the third is, a person once condemned in the worth of his tongue, on account of a wrong judgment that he had previously given.

10. There are three universalities of a country: an assembly; court; and church.

11. Whoever shall call witnesses, or evidences, in a lawful court; if they come not when called, the caller loses his cause.

12. The time for a guarantor beyond sea, a year and a day. The time for aid, from one court to another.

13. If thieves, or a person outlawed from the lord's peace by a public act, or lawful banishment and process, be killed; it is no cause of objection in court between the plaintiff and defendant in a suit: for it is free to kill outlaws, unless they surrender themselves to law in the lord's mercy.

14. There are three things superior to law, and interfere with law, when they come in contact with it: the lord, in the case where he does better than law, in the pursuit of truth, or in doing mercy; a privilege against which no proof can be brought; and an acknowledged contract.

15. Whatever person shall break his vow of religion, whether a monk, or a friar, or an anchorite, or a hermit, or any kind of religious person bound in the service of God; or a priest who shall take a wife, after the bond of priesthood; their testimony is not to be credited, in any place, and they are excluded from the law, unless they seek a pardon from the pope, or the bishop, through a public penance.

16. If a person, in the defence of himself, or of his property, kill another, or do sarasad to him; he is not to make reparation, if in sincerity he can prove it to be true, that in defending himself, or his property, he committed the deed.

17. If a person contend for what least to forfeit a camlwrw; the law declares, that it is for one penny: because there cannot be a plaint for less than a penny; and that it is not pertinent to fix a camlwrw of a greater sum than the gain to the party.

18. Neither brothers, nor cousins, are to pay ebediws for land; for they do not obtain it without purchase.

19. A proprietor cannot give his land to a saint, nor to a church, nor to any other sanctuary, without the permission of his lord; and neither is it right.

20. No bishop is to consecrate any land, which shall not have been previously consecrated, without the permission of the lord, nor to devote it to any ecclesiastical purpose.

21. There are two cases in which a person is to forfeit his land of inheritance: waylaying; and treason to his lord: if caught, such are to forfeit life more signally than a thief, whether they be one or many ; if they will to be reconciled to the lord, and with the kindred, the payment is to be twofold, in each of the two cases : a third case is, if a lord be making an attack upon another country, and one of his men warns that country, he is to forfeit his patrimony, and his increasing land : if there be a raith, it is required to be double, in any case where the above points are to be denied. If he, or they, resort to the pope, or the power of Rome, and bring a writing so as to be recognized by the bishop, or such as shall be acting for him, that he has performed penance towards God, on account of that deed, he is to obtain his rightful land, or an equivalent to that.

22. If a person should kill a clergyman, or a man graduated in orders, if he perform penance, he loses not his land, but is to pay the galanas to the kindred and the lord ; and he is to have his land free.

23. If a person be excommunicated, for whatsoever cause, and the lord seek to confiscate his property ; the law says, that he is not liable until he shall have been under excommunication during a month and a day, after it shall be publicly known ; and then the lord may proceed.

24. Three things cannot be done in absence : testifying ; guaranteeing ; and violence.

25. There are three sufferances concurrent with law, for a time, but which are not commensurate with law, and are not to be made use of, according to law, that is, where the causes are shown : one is, when a person suffers oppression from an officer of the lord, enforcing illegality against him, instead of law ; and that the law calls spoilage sufferance : the second is, when a person suffers from a covetous person, or one of like disposition, having conservancy of office, or one without either instruction or good in him ; and such the law calls unworthy sufferance ; and, according to law, no benefit is to be derived from any unworthy sufferance, but it is to be put down : the third is, when a person suffers from the lord urging him to his disadvantage in the presence of the court ; and that the law calls a mere fraud, in the presence of the judges ; and for that there is to be reparation, according as the law shall direct, as reparation is made for violence ; for it is punishable for the court of the king to give counsel to any one, unasked for : and for that breach of law, the law will afford him relief, when he shall ask it.

the court: one is, the first whereon proceedings shall be had in the court; the second is, the plaint of one with a right of title; the third is, a plaint of oppression.

27. Three things which will not be secure in law: deception; collusion; and wrong judgment: except by the lapse of terms.

28. Three persons whose words are not to be taken against any one: a professed religious after breaking his vow; a witness who shall bear false testimony; and a proclaimed thief.

29. Three things for which sound law is not answerable: one is, judging mercifully; the second is, excommunicating a person before answering; the third is, hanging a person for four legal pence, and there can be but hanging for a hundred pounds.

30. There are three unconscionable acts in law: one is, bringing to a complete termination before investigating the truth; the second is, judging adversely to necessity; the third is, urging a person to his disadvantage.

31. There are three illegalities: one is, dealing amends to another instead of law; the second is, taking an animal, in one of the three open distrains, more than the two parts and the third; the third is, adjudging to a person more than the measure of his claim.

32. There are three things superior to law: those three are, a true prid upon land, where it can be proved and cannot be contravened; a lord investigating truth between two men; and long acquiescence of a country in what has the place of law: and, in those three cases a judge is not to judge, since they originate not from law; and he is to judge but of law: the country, the lord, and necessity, there decide.

33. The testimony of a husband is not to be credited, by law, against a wife, nor that of a wife against a husband; for, as every wife shares in thirds with her husband, she is not to be credited against him: for the third is not to be credited against the two parts.

34. Testimony can be brought against a word and a deed, but not against the thought of the heart: and in that the two laws agree, that of the church and that of Howel, in their privilege; except in three places where the inappropriate and the appropriate are equal: one is, in the privilege of birth; the second is, in an oath; the third is, where no offspring of a person can be brought more worthy than himself; for the law says, that such offspring is not inappropriate, if he be a prohibited person, for to him belong all the claims of his father, and all his defences.

IV. [OF SUITS.]

1. If there be a suit between two persons concerning land ; and in that suit the judge give a wrong judgment, and the plaintiff call for an investiture of the land ; and the defendant say, in answer to him : ' A wrong judgment has been given against me ; and there is my pledge to its being a wrong judgment ; and to the law I appeal, that investiture of that land ought not to be given until the judgment be certain concerning it ; since I appeared against him, in the place I ought, the judge being in his seat.' And the plaintiff answer him : ' There has been here a court, consisting of four branches, a common lord, a presiding judge, and the junction of two parties present ; and in the sequel a judgment in my favour of my land, by law ; and to the law I appeal, that I am entitled to the land adjudged to me.' occurred against the judge on his judgment seat, but sufferance of the judgment until the parties separated, the lord is to give investiture of the land to the plaintiff; although the judgment might be wrong, since no opposition was made to it.

2. If a wrong judgment be given against a party in a suit, and the person, against whom the wrong judgment was given, come, and ask the judge if he will confirm it : ' If thou dost confirm it, I will give my pledge against thee : ' and the judge answer : ' I will take counsel : ' and he who doubted him say : ' Thou oughtest not to take counsel respecting this judgment ; for, by counsel thou hast judged ; and after judging, thou hast pronounced it ; therefore, thou art not entitled to a second counsel respecting it. ' The law says, that he has his election, whether he will confirm it, or not confirm it, whilst he shall remain on his judgment seat ; and he may take counsel with those who have joined with him in his judgment. If the counsel be not to confirm it, let the judgment be extinguished and defunct : for the wrong decision, let the judge pay a camlwrw to the lord. Should the result of the counsel be to confirm the judgment ; let both parties deposit a pledge in the hand of the lord : and let the one that shall fail be punished, as the law declares, by requiring his tongue.

3. If a judge decide against a party in a suit, and it should be resisted by him who has been cast, and a pledge be offered against him before his rising from the judgment seat, without his offering one in opposition, and thereupon the court and the parties separate ; and the judge should repent not having confirmed it, and will then to enter into mutual pledge ; and he who was cast should say : ' Thou hast no right now to mutual pledging, since thou hast not pledged upon thy judgment seat. ' The law says, that there is to be neither mutual pledging, nor confirmation of judgment, but at the time of pleading, and that the judgment becomes defunct. A camlwrw is to be paid by the judge who decided it ; for it is not just to enforce the worth of his tongue, since he did not pledge.

4. There is one case in law where there is to be a mutual pledging with the judge, without his being upon his judgment-seat : by his giving a wrong judgment against a person in contempt ; such a person can, unto the end of a year and a day, enter into mutual pledge, when he will, if he and the judge be of the same country :

thereafter the law is shut between them ; and it can only be a claim beyond the year.

5. If a person sue for a thing forcibly taken, and the defendant answer by a denial ; it is right to adjudge to him his denial ; since there cannot be evidences as to forcible taking, because there is an established raith thereon ; and that there are not to be evidences where there is to be a raith : and the amount of the raith is, the oaths of fifty men. If he confess it, let him restore the thing forcibly taken, with a dirwy to the lord. If the defendant say : ' I am not to answer thee, in respect to this claim ; because I have restored to thee the property thou claimest of me, and have compromised with thee concerning it ; and, if thou shalt doubt this, I have enough who know it.' It is necessary for the plaintiff to deny that ; or avouch something else of stronger proof. If he deny, let the evidences of the defendant be brought forward ; for it is not as to the forcible taking that he produces his evidences, but as to the restoration and the compromise. If he acknowledge the restoration and the compromise, let it rest there. If the plaintiff say : ' I do not deny the restoration of what has been restored to me of that forcibly taken, that is a groat, and a pound was forcibly taken ; I appeal to the law, although I may have a right but to one penny forcibly taken, I have a right to a denial as to that, equally as for a pound, or to have restored what was forcibly taken.' If the defendant deny, let him deny as we have said above : if he confess, let what was forcibly taken be restored, with a dirwy to the lord. If the defendant say, that he refers to the record of the court, that he did not deny a restoration and a compromise, but that the whole of the property was not restored, and refers it to the decision of the law, that it was now no longer a forcible taking, but a debt ; and to deny a debt, ' there is only my own oath required.' The law says, in respect to a debt, without bond, and without proof, that there is only necessary against one tongue urging, another denying.

6. There are nineteen things necessary, before the authority of the court is exercised upon any one. Three pertain for the president to accomplish : to preside equitably ; to preserve the right of the king ; to legalize parties, to give confidence to the weak against the strong, and security for him to demand, and to answer. Two pertain to the apparitor : testifying ; and summoning. There are five things necessary for the defendant to obtain, before he shall lose his cause : summons ; claim ; answer ; judgment ; and safety in coming to the court. And the seven qualifications of ■ judge : *and if the time to receive a pledge lapses, if those points occur to a defendant, it is necessary to come to a termination on that account. Whoever shall say that he gets wronged in any one of these matters, the law is to hear him.

7. There are four keys to the functions of a judge : one is, frequent asking for thy instruction ; the second is, to keep the instruction thou mayest obtain ; the third is, to love and to be in awe of thy teacher ; the fourth is, to love honesty, and to hate wrong. And that for the love and the fear of God, and contempt of life : if thou art alive to day, thou knowest not whether thou shalt be to-morrow ; and, also, the law says, when the tongue shall be adjudging, the soul trembles. And, therefore, there are two things, which united together, in law, constitute wisdom ; to wit, learning, and natural wisdom ; and, therefore, it is said, that no one can be a judge on account of learning ; and no one can be a judge without learning ; that is, notwithstanding what a person may learn, he cannot be ■ judge, unless there shall be wisdom implanted in his heart ; and, notwithstanding the amount of his natural wisdom, he cannot be a judge without learning. Dewi of Brevi !

8. Three persons for whom when absent a tavodiog is to stand : one is, a person who shall be on a pilgrimage to Rome, or to the grave of Christ ; a person who may be sick and bed-ridden from a wound, or cut, or natural disease, so as to be unable to come either on horseback, or on foot ; and a person confined in prison ; and likewise a person who shall be in the army of a lord, for the highest service attached to land is military service by necessity, or duty ; and that is a fourth cause. Dewi of Brevi !

9. If a person shall prefer a plaint of title to land and soil, and the defendant seek to transfer his ownership to another before the determination of the plaint ; the law says, that he cannot ; for a plaint confines the land to the defending party, until law and judgment shall have run its course between him and the plaintiff.

10. If there be a contention amongst the court of a cymwd, or a cantref, concerning a judgment, and they should not agree ; let it be observed in what two parts coincide, and by that let it be adjudged ; for the two parts are to lead the third in every case.

11. If a person be called in court, and, before judgment be passed upon him, he should come, and offer himself to abide immediate law; if he be refused, let him be free from the claim and the demand; since it is not right to reject any one who offers to submit; and, if he be rejected, it is a privilege of custody after rejection: and the punishment that ought to have been inflicted on the defendant, is to be imposed upon the officer who rejected him; because it was through the fault of the officer that the defendant escaped.

12. Whoever shall lose a deposit, that is delivered to him to keep, through negligence, let him pay the amount of what he lost: and if a guardian secrete it, let him pay twofold.

13. In a book called the Lives of the Fathers, it is shown in writing, that a monk accepted a deposit to keep; and after he died, the angel would not permit his soul to be received into the repose of souls, until he restored the deposit; and, therefore, the soul was returned into the body, to restore the deposit. When so much as that was required from the dead, in respect to a deposit, it is right to require great things from the living.

14. Every deposit ought to be paid for, except a deposit in a church: the church is a holy place, and the mother of all men, and it is forbidden to keep a deposit in it; for it is a house of prayer, and not the house of thieves: and since it is forbidden to keep a deposit in it, any deposit stolen from it is not to be paid for.

15. Four persons are entitled to dadenhudd of the body of such as shall have died in possession of land: a son; a grandson; a great grandson; and the original heir of the several inheritors.

16. Four persons are to obtain investiture: one is, a co-inheritor, after brothers shall have shared their patrimony between them, and the share of another being extinguished, without an heir of his body, the living shall have investiture of that land; the second is, a second claimant of the several inheritors, before sharing, who shall have investiture by his rod title; the third is, a person who is entitled to investiture of increasing land, which he shall gain through himself; the fourth is, investiture of conservatorship. And there is the distinction between dadenhudd and investiture.

17. Three brothers, of whom one is entitled to the patrimony, and the two others are not entitled, yet, of the same mother and the same father, of the same married husband and of the same married wife:

that is, the one who is to have it is an unblemished one ; and one of the other two is a mute ; the other is a leper : the reason for excluding the leper is, that he is not of the world ; and the third, who is the mute, because he is incomplete as to tongue, and so is incompetent to be a judge : for the complete cannot be made of the incomplete : and on that account neither is he a person, and since not a person, he cannot be a judge.

18. Land, on account of which one person, or more, be killed, without negation in law, is denominated blood-land ; and the children of him who is killed are to possess that land.

19. There are three natural roots to the one word law : truth ; conscience ; and learning : if these do not coincide, law is not worth a name : truth is the root of judgment ; conscience is the root of distribution ; learning is the root of the conducting of a suit ; and, its interminable reception is caused by every pleading not determined through those roots.

20. There are three ownerships of land unto a time that they are to be car-removeable, and to which there are terms : the term for a tenant on the land of another person is a year and a day, with three days of grace ; the term for one invested is, until he shall part with his privilege and right of title ; the term for a counter-party is, until the lord shall compel him to amend his privilege and his right of title ; and, if he refuse, the law bars him therefrom, in one of the modes whereby an owner is to lose his land ; a counter-party is, an original heir to have a dadenhudd.

21. There are three occupations from which no advantage is to be had : one is, occupation against consent ; the second is, occupation without knowledge ; the third is, occupation as to which there shall exist a bond and penalty thereon as long as he shall have it, such as an obligation, or other writing : an owner loses not his land, although a number of persons intervene beyond the ninth descent, if he should be able to verify, that there had previously been a cry against violence, during the lawful times ; because an intervention does not occur to a claim in opposition to one who is entitled, until the above-mentioned causes shall be determined.

22. An immediate suit is not appropriate but by three modes ; and these are : if a plaintiff make a formal plaint to the officers of the court ; and, in the first day, parties be called, and the plaintiff come not when called ; and thereupon the defendant pray for judgment of dismissal, and it be adjudged to him; and thereupon the plaintiff come into the court, and complain to the lord and his officers, that his right and title are becoming nugatory in law, before the expiration of the day stipulated by the king to dispense law: for every thing is uninterrupted, and for the plaintiff's neglect he became subject to a camlwrw; and, therefore, the plaintiff can testify to the lord, that the defendant does not deny; and then he can prefer his suit immediately. The second mode appropriate for an immediate suit is, if a plaintiff sue in the conventional court, with the representative of the king presiding over that court, there is no delay of time for an answer; on that day there is to be an end of erroneous laws, wrong customs, and feeble cymwds: and neither is there a delay of time for a defendant, for that court of pleas is superior to delay. The third place appropriate for an immediate suit is, when an officer shall deposit his rod of office in that place, there is no delay of time in that law; for the king is to exhibit his rod of office impartially to every one. Dewi of Brevi. I. C.

23. Whoever shall cut off the thumb by the hand, let there be paid half the worth of the hand.

25. Three things which do not accord: fallacy in an oath; excuse in confession; and trust to long life.

26. Three persons, according to law, who are not bound by what they may do: one is, a drunken man; the second is, a youth under his fourteenth year; the third is, a person compelled against his will.

27. There are three privileges to a canghellor: the privilege of a castellan; the privilege of a defending party; and the privilege of an unrestricted person: the reason for his having the privilege of a castellan is, that he can imprison whenever he will; the reason for his having the privilege of a defending party is, that he must answer for oppression; the reason for his having the privilege of an unrestricted person is, that it belongs to no one to put a task upon him.

28. Three persons by whom no benefit is derived from any thing they may say in court: the blind; the drunk; and the deaf: because nothing that they may do avails in law.

29. The above figure guides a person to understand the arrangement and connexion existing between him and his ancestors, and his co-inheritors, and his children. For the ancestors of a person are, his father, and his grandfather, and his great grandfather; the co-inheritors are, brothers, and cousins, and second cousins; the heirs of a person are, those who proceed from his body, as a son, and a grandson, and a great grandson. And if a person be skilful in the use of the figure described above, when a person descended from any one of the three kins of the body of the original stock shall die without heir of his body, he will know who is to obtain the land of such a one, according to law. For, unto the third degree, there is to be an appropriate sharing of land in the court of a cymwd, or cantrev, and it can be claimed in that same court; and a plaint of kin and descent cannot be prosecuted out of a conventional court, where there is a supreme judge sitting, on behalf of the king, and dispensing law by the privilege of the sovereignty of the supreme court, without any kind of deficiency in that law, or the lack of any kind of authority, or of justice. For certain points pertain to the supreme court to determine, those that occur thou wilt see in the sequel, written more perspicuously, and which cannot be determined in the court of a cymwd, or cantrev, for various causes, as may be seen in the sequel. For it is not proper to determine, nor to practise one part of the authority of the law, by blending it with another, but to leave it as it was established from the beginning; and, on that account, it is necessary for a person to learn and scrutinize the arrangement of every portion of the authority; as will be testified further on.

V. THE RUDIMENT OF THE LAW OF HOWEL THE GOOD.

1. Whoever may will to know what law is, and its branches, and to become acquainted with the matter of a claim, and in what manner a claim is to be answered, and that with intelligence and effect, is to consider the three subjects of the judgment book : to wit, the three branches of law authority ; and the three matters of claim ; and the three kinds of answer there are in the law : and this book is called the rudiment of the law of Howel the good.

2. Whoever may will to learn the law, it is necessary for him to know what is law. For law is a righteous institution, made by the concurrence of the king and his kingdom, and the skill of the wise, for the arrangement of the litigations in dispute between a plaintiff and a defendant, through the interposition of four agents, the common lord, the presiding judge, and two parties present, and in the nearest possible way to the truth.

3. After a person shall have known what law is, and how many branches of authority there are, he may be able to understand every branch apart, and what pertains to each branch : for,

4. The authority consists of three parts : to wit, the law of the sovereign court of the king ; the law of the country ; and the practice of each.

5. To the first part pertains the elucidation of the privilege of the king and the queen, and their offspring, and all the officers of the sovereign court ; and the determining of points which cannot be determined in the court of a cymwd, or cantrev ; besides the points which were appointed for the conventional court ; to wit, the sixteen points, which are to be found in another place, written in Latin, so as to be easier credited and observed.

6. It is well known, that in the sovereign court are determined the contention between a pledge and counter pledge, or the decision of a judgment, until it shall be removed before the canonists, and then it belongs to the conventional court ; and suits for land, whether granted by deed, by favour, or by gift, and all land that shall be under the privilege of the sovereign court, are to be determined by the sovereign court.

7. Many things may be determined in the court of ■ cymwd, or cantrev, if the plaint be preferred respecting them in the sovereign court. The law does not restrict them from being determined in the sovereign court, if the plaint be there preferred respecting them ; excepting any established matter that is required, according to the course of law, to be brought into the court where it shall originate. Also, land that shall be sued for by kin and descent, from the original share onward, is to be determined in the sovereign court : but, unto the third descent, land is to be sued for in the court to which the land pertains ; as between brothers, and cousins, and second cousins ; for every one of those knows the propiate share which he is entitled to have, according to law.

8. From thence onward, there is no propiate division of land, although they may be proprietors. On that account it has been established, according to law, for a suit of that kind to be determined in the sovereign court ; for such a plaint is denominated paramount, according to the opinion of the wise.

9. This is the reason, that a plaint of kin and descent, from the third degree onward, cannot be determined in the court of a cymwd, or cantrev ; because a plaint of kin and descent cannot be pursued, but against a stock of correlatives to the person who shall claim the land, and who shall be holding that land, through the same common ancestor, from which he likewise claims a share with them, in right thereof, and being able to trace his unextinguished kin, by oaths of the elders of the country, to himself, without three times lapsing to the distaff. And, lest such land should chance to be in divers canghellor-ships, after being shared among the family stock, and that the shares of some of the family stock should be in some of the canghellor-ships, and the shares of others in some different canghellor-ships, so as not to be cognizable in the court of a cymwd, or cantrev ; it was established for a suit of that nature to belong to the sovereign court ; so that every one of the family stock might be compelled by the effect of one conjoined plaint, to answer jointly to such as should question them.

10. For it is not regular to move a plaint from court to court for one matter ; nor to prefer a plaint, against one person, or two, or three, of kin and descent from the third degree onward, when there are more of the family stock, holding the land, in opposition to him : because it may happen for an inheritance of land to have descended in small shares, among forty, or sixty co-inheritors ; and one among the family stock, or his father, or his grandfather, or his great grandfather, might be out of the country, and without having had a share.

11. If such one should come, and sue any one of the family stock separately, if he gained any part, then he would have as much as him, whatever quantity might be in his hand ; for, where there shall not have been an original sharing of land, one proprietor is not entitled to preference before another : and thus he himself would have the half of the whole inheritance, where, according to law, he is entitled to only an equality with each one of the united number that should be holding the land, in opposition to him. And, on that account, it was settled for that claim to belong to the sovereign court, where every body could be compelled to answer jointly. And, if he should there succeed, then he is to be admitted to participate with them ; and he would be allotted an equality with each of the united number that should be holding the land, in opposition to him.

12. But if one makes a building, or other lawful work, he is not to remove therefrom, on account of the other, if he can show him a side and gable, in another place, equally good as his own place if he had done no lawful work thereon ; but, if he cannot do so, it is necessary to receive the other there, upon making satisfaction on account of the building, and the labour previously bestowed upon the land. For the third prid upon land is the lawful labour that shall be done, so that the land be improved thereby ; and that the person is bound to pay, if he obtain his share without plaint, in the manner that conservancy is paid.

13. If a brother, or cousin, or second cousin, or any other who is jointly entitled, should suppose that he can claim a portion of land from one jointly entitled, by a plea of wrong possession, he cannot do it, by law : because, that by a plea of wrong possession, the whole can only be gained, or the whole lost : except in one case, when one not entitled becomes a proprietor of land, and there come one entitled, whose right as a proprietor is unextinguished, and claim of him ; the proprietor cannot be deprived of his due, for that his proprietary right has not been extinguished, neither can the other be ousted, for he has become a proprietor : and here is the single case where a part is to be obtained through a plaint of wrong possession.

14. If the one entitled suffer the unentitled to hold land, in opposition to him, through three lives of ancestors on both sides, in the same jurisdiction of a cymwd, or cantrev, the one entitled is not to be heard afterwards ; for it is an everlasting foreclosure. But, if he be in another country, from lawful causes, at what time soever he may come, within the ninth person, he is to be heard, and have admission, as mentioned before. And there are some of the points pertaining to the first part of law authority.

15. In the second part of the authority there is explained the constitutional law established between the king and the people of his kingdom, and between each of these and the other : and therein are included the three columns of law ; the worth of wild and tame animals, of which people make use ; the law of land and soil ; the teithi of surety and debtor ; lawful customs ; and many other particulars, as they are exemplified in the judgment book : and all those it is incumbent should be known, and fully and minutely understood, before a person can be worthy of being a judge in the law.

16. In the third part of the authority there is a portion of each of the two laws, of the law of the court, and of the law of the country ; and this is denominated the practice of law. And in that part is set forth the terms for commencing divers suits ; such as the ninth day of May, or of December, in respect to land and soil, by kin and descent ; or to demand a rehearing of a frustrated cause ; and to hold terms for testifying, or for calling forward evidences ; or for objecting, or for contravening ; or terms of mutual pledging for judgment. And that part exemplifies the mode of keeping the form of every cause free from a faulty word, or ambiguity, or the lapsing of time ; and that by examination, as the men of the court and the judges may choose, whether by word after word, or by phrase after phrase. After a person shall have observed every part of these matters separately, and each subject in every part, and each word in every subject, it will be easier for him to understand law ; for law is only known by him who shall know how to understand it.

17. After he shall have known all that, then it belongs to him to know how to form a claim and answer. Whoever is desirous of forming a claim, it will be necessary for him to know how many matters of action there are : for,

18. There are three matters of action : a sight ; a word ; and a deed.

19. Although a sight, a word, and a deed be three matters of action, yet the law does not say, that every sight, and every word, and every deed, can be matter of action : therefore, it is necessary to know which are matters of action, and which are not. And, in the first place, sight is described, as it is spoken of in the judgment book.

20. Three sights are brought forward, in law: the sight of a witness, as to his testimony; the sight of an informer, as to his information; and the sight of a guilty criminal, as to killing, or burning, or theft.

21. The way to understand that is: when a person shall sue another for a thing through evidences, the law denominates those evidences witnesses, in that case; for whoever shall be able to bear testimony, it is right to call him a witness; and the law says, that evidences can bear testimony in opposition to denial and defence, and that they can bear testimony as to what has taken place before procedure in the action; and besides, that they can bear testimony in many cases; and, on that account, they can also be called witnesses; and when a witness of that description shall swear, it will be necessary for him to swear to knowing and seeing what he shall swear to, as the law sets forth; for the oath of an evidence is, to swear to knowing and seeing him, of whom he swears. And that is the sight of a witness as to his testimony; because, through his testimony as to what he has seen, such an action is to be proceeded in; and so the law says, that his sight is a matter of action, from his testimony. The oath of any other witness, as a witness respecting a faulty word, is, to his having been certified before, as to what he is about swearing to.

22. The second is, the sight of an informer as to his information. The way of understanding which is: if property be stolen from a person, and it be denied by the criminal, and the loser come, accompanied by an informer, and charge the theft upon the criminal; the oath of that informer is, to swear to knowing, and seeing the theft by the criminal. And that is the sight of an informer as to his information; and, from the effect of that sight, the action is to be prosecuted against the criminal, and he is sent to a raith of the country; and, on that account, it is called a matter of action: and that is the second sight that is brought forward in law.

23. The third is the sight of a guilty criminal, as to killing, or burning, or theft. The manner of that is: if a person be an accessory in criminality; as seeing the killing of a person, and suffering it, it will be a matter of action for the parents of that murdered person, and his co-inheritors, against that accessory; for, to them is to be paid, the retribution for accessories; and denial of the criminal act likewise both to payment, for an accessory without the act of hand or foot, to the lord, is only a 24. The second matter of action is a word: for,

25. There are three faulty words: a word from which there results a tongue-wound;
a faulty word in court; and tongue-reddening, in respect to killing, or burning, or theft.

26. The manner of that is: if any one speak a harsh word to the king, it will be a matter of action for the king against him; and he is to pay a twofold camlwrw; or if he shall speak any harsh word to the king's priest at one of his three principal festivals; or while reading a letter, or writing in the presence of the king; or to a judge, on pledging against him as to his right judgment, if he confirm it, that is to be a matter of action for the judge against the party, who then is to pay his saraad to him. Further, it is said, that the king is entitled to a penalty for a harsh word, that may be spoken by one person towards another, in a church, in a churchyard, and in a lawful session; it is a matter of action to the king against such for a camlwrw, although the person to whom it may be spoken get no satisfaction.

27. The second guilty word is, a faulty word in court; and that may occur in these three ways: a faulty word in claiming, either redundant, or wanting; a faulty word in defending, either redundant, or wanting; and a faulty word in denying: by the first the plaintiff is to lose such part of his claim, as shall depend upon the word, if witnesses be produced against him, but he does not forfeit a camlwrw, since there are only three guilty plaintiffs; by the second, or by the third, the defendant is to forfeit a camlwrw, with satisfaction for the claim, pertaining to the word testified as faulty; and it becomes a matter of action to the king for the camlwrw. The meaning of a redundant word is, speaking to more than the extent of the law; the meaning of a word wanting is, speaking to less than the extent of the law.

28. The third guilty word is tongue-reddening, in respect to killing, or burning, or theft. The manner of that is: if a person, in confederacy, should inform the criminal where the person was to be found, and similar things thereto, it becomes a matter of action to the parents and co-inheritors of the murdered, against that accessary; for, payment is to be rendered to them on account of the accessaries, and denial of the crime likewise, as well as to the kindred, if they prosecute. Some say, that the kindred are not to have payment on account of the accessaries; because the kindred are only entitled to payment of galanas, and payment of saraad; and that denial money is not connected with either of those: the law says, that it is to the parents and co-inheritors of the murdered, payment is made for accessaries that are acknowledged. The law says, likewise, that all accessaries in deed, of the accessaries of murder, or burning, or theft, are every one of them liable to a dirwy: for tongue-reddening, and eye-reddening, without the act of hand or foot; whoever shall commit them is liable to a camlwrw. Payment, on account of the accessaries of confessed galanas, is, by law, to be rendered to the parents and co-inheritors of the murdered, if they prefer a plaint for it: and to them, and to the kindred likewise, is the raith for denying the crime to be rendered, or payment of the galanas.

29. The third matter of action is a deed: and notwithstanding the law says a deed is a matter of action, the law is not competent to show, nor to declare what several deeds are matters of action; but that every deed committed against law, is a matter of action to him upon whom the deed shall be committed, against him who shall commit it; such as violence, theft, and surreption, and their like; excepting the act of a mad dog, and the like. Further, there are three acts depending upon proof, to such as have a claim, as the law sets forth, in the judgment book, for labour, lawful, or unlawful, done upon land, and the like.

30. After a person shall have become acquainted with the divers matters of action that exist, it will be necessary for him to know in what manner a claim is to be preferred, and in what manner it is to be answered: for,

31. By four words, with their pertunances the claim is to be made; and by three words an answer is to be given. The four words in preferring a claim are these: whom thou claimest of; what thou claimest; what amount thou claimest; and, at what time thou claimest: when a person has become acquainted with that, it becomes necessary for him to know what pertains to every word separately.

32. As to the first word, that is to say: who thou claimest of; it pertains to name the proper name of the plaintiff, and the proper name of the defendant; also, to whom may thy plaint be preferred; to the officers of such and such a court, or to a canghellor; thus: 'Ithel, son of Cyvnerth, being present, prosecutes a plaint before the officers of such and such a court; and, if he will, mention the principal officer, the canghellor, or the steward, if it shall be in a conventional court; and, should he not will, there is neither fault, nor deficiency in not expressing it: 'against Tudur, son of Grufudd, in the situation of a defending party.' That pertains to the first word of the claim.

33. As to the second word, to wit, what thou claimest: it pertains to name, in what manner thou hast become divested of thy property: whether by violence; or by theft; or by surreption; or by loan; or by deposit; or by borrowing; or by what injury soever done to thee, or to thine: and also, what kind of property; whether animals; or gold, or silver; or title to land and soil, by any of the three dadenhudds; or by wrong possession, through any one of the three; or by kin and descent: if loan, or deposit, or borrowing; naming what sort of security there is for recovering it; or, if by exchange, or contract, or other condition, naming what kind of security there is for them, thus: 'Through matter and cause; to wit, by the said Tudur having taken a bay horse surreptitiously.' And that pertains to the second word.

34. As to the third word there pertains, what amount thou claimest: that is, if they be animals, to set forth, what be their number, and what be their teithi; whether a horse; or a bullock before his prime, mentioning its age; if gold, or silver, mentioning to what amount; if damage, what the extent, and what privilege is attached to the plaintiff; if for trees, what may be their number, and what kind of trees they be, whether oak, or hazel, or thorns, or whether every one of them, or other trees; if land and soil, naming what number of erwes, and what may be due for the property, or for the damage, whether lawful money, or curt money, thus: 'This horse was complete in teithi, the which the law denominates a drudge horse, and was of the value of three score of the curt pennies.' And that pertains to the third word.

35. As to the fourth word, to wit, what time thou claimest: it pertains to mention the day and the year, when thou wert deprived of thy property, or when the damage was done; or the contract, or the condition; or, if it be an exchange, on what day, and where it occurred; or, if loan, or deposit, or borrowing, on what day, and what year, it ought to have been restored, or payment for the exchange; if land, on what day thou wert dispossessed of it, and where the land is situated, and what privilege is attached to it; and set forth, by which of the three detentions thou wert deprived of thy property, or thou wert damaged; and describe the personality of the plaintiff, or the defendant, at the time when the breach of law was committed. And that pertains to the fourth word of the claim, thus: 'The day and the year, wherein he committed the surreption, the Tuesday next after the feast of St. Luke last past within the present year; and the place where the horse was, when taken, under the privilege of the rod of this canghellorship, is called *Glan Marlais; and Ithel being a person competent to demand, and Tudur being a person competent to answer; and upon demand made, on the Tuesday next following the calends of winter last past within the present year, he made a denial; and, by the denial, he is causing one of the three detentions: to wit, taking a thing from a person, without returning it. And requiring a reply.'

36. And if there be any one who shall wonder at the fixing a day of demand as to the claim, without its being pertinent to any one of the four binding words, it is necessary to name it; for it would not be detention until it were denied, and there was no proof of detention until the negation; and there is no cause for claim without detention: and, therefore, it is necessary to name the day of demand.

37. After a person shall know how to prefer a claim, it becomes necessary for him to know what is the mode of answering: for,

38. By three words the answer is to be made: by denial; or confession; or defence. Concerning the denial is first treated.

39. There are three kinds of denial: denial of the whole charge brought against a person; and that is to be denied by a fixed raith, with neither more nor less.

40. The second is, confessing a part of the charge of a criminal act, and denying the entirety of the act; and that is denied by augmenting the fixed raith: as in the columns of law concerning homicide, wherein fifty men swear, in denying homicide and its accessaries entirely; then a hundred, or two hundred, or three hundred swear, in denying homicide, and confessing an accessory. The manner of that is: it is more difficult to credit one who shall confess a part of a charge of a criminal act, than one who shall deny the charge altogether; and, on that account, an augmentation takes place, according to the privilege of him who shall confess.

41. The third is, confessing a part, and denying another part, wherein there is not an act; and that is denied by diminishing the fixed raith: as in the case of suretiship, wherein the oath of a surety with six persons nearest to himself in worth, is a denial of his suretiship altogether; then he swears himself, in denying a part, and confessing another part of his suretiship. The way of understanding that is: it is easier to credit him, from his having confessed a part of his suretiship, than if he were to deny it entirely; for it is to avoid payment a denial is made; and, on that account, the raith upon him is diminished; by reason of there being no criminal act therein: in a similar manner as if a person claimed a pound of another, who confessed the one six score pence, and denied the other six score; then it is denied by lessening the fixed raith, wherein forty-eight men swear in denying a pound, the half of the raith, in respect to what he has confessed, is dispensed with: since there is no pleading and confession.

42. And thus every denial will be a complete answer, to such as shall so avouch, by rendering a full raith, as may pertain to the privilege of the thing claimed, whether the oath of one person, or the oaths of many. Where there shall be one tongue asserting, and another denying; the oath of one person is sufficient for denying it, until a time shall come for a counter oath, where an established raith shall be pertinent for denying it.

43. If a condition be named, as a security for affirming it; such as briduw, or suretiship, or evidences, or contract-witnesses, and their like; the whole of those are to be denied, each of them specially, through a fixed raith: and according to the nature of the condition that may be stipulated to verify the claim, and not according to the magnitude of the debt, the denial is to be made, in that case.

44. The second answer is a defence: for,

45. There are three kinds of defence: one is, that the demand shall not be answered out of time. The way for understanding that is: to keep time, so as to be able to verify to a verdict of the country, except where a record of court is pertinent, that there was no loss of time since he defended, or denied, or answered the claim: as that he might not answer before he was questioned; or might not render a denial in due time in law ; or that he might not defend before answering to the matter ; or that he might not object ; or that he might not contravene ; or that he might not give a mutual pledge in due time ; and their like ; as the law sets forth in its practices : for the law says, that it is necessary to keep time in every thing.

46. The second is, a defence, so as never to answer to the claim. The way to understand that is: as if there were an answer to a claim, with being able to prove, through any one of the above conditions, a fault in pleading, which coincided with the gist and matter of the suit altogether, although not pressing upon the mode of a suit, or the practice of pleading: such as intervention in a common country; or a trifling claim; or a claim without an owner; or the lapse of time, so as to become an everlasting impediment; and the like.

47. The third is, a defence with answering, so that nothing shall be lost through the claim. The meaning of that is: when a defendant should answer by testifying a faulty word, or ambiguity, against a plaintiff, not involving a total loss; or by testifying a claim beyond a year; or a counter claim in opposition to a claim; or the demand of a moveable property debt in the blank days; or the demand of land and soil when the court is closed; the which become impediments of terms: and then it is permitted to have recourse anew to law.

48. Law does not bar a person from land due to him in a shorter space than three ages of ancestors on each side, and that peaceably: three ages of ancestors are nine score years, three score years in each age.

49. If a person be adjudged a saleable thief, and he have property, and do not buy himself; the law says, where he shall refuse to release himself from death, when able, he is to be executed for the theft: if he were unable to buy himself, although his kindred might fail to buy him, he is not to be executed for the means which he could not acquire.

50. If a person commit ferocious theft of a thing of less worth than four legal pence; it is right to adjudge him to be a saleable thief, and that twofold, that is, fourteen pounds.

51. Property rescued in war, is to be shared equally between the person who shall rescue it and the owner.

52. Whoever shall give prid upon land, and cannot confirm it by deed of session; the law says, that it is not necessary to answer him, for it is a void prid.

53. For a buffet one person shall give to another in anger, it is right to pay twenty-four pence, with his saraad to the person.

54. As a son is heir to patrimony, so a father is heir to the property of the son, unless he have an heir; and, in like manner, a mother to her daughter's property.

55. Whoever shall hold land and soil a year and a day, and serve for it in the army, and assemblages, and courts, and every thing attached to it; and an owner come to demand a share of it; he is to pay to the occupant a conservancy fee for the land.

56. If a possessor of land die, the nearest relative to the dead in grade of kindred, within the three grades of kindred on the side of his ancestors, shall have that land.

57. If a possessor of land die, without an heir of his body, or co-heir within the degree of cousin; the king is the heir to that land. Second cousins have the land of the nephew, and the nephew has the land of the uncle who may die without an heir of his body: and a cousin has not the land of another cousin, by law, unless it had been unshared between him and the dead, and for such the law is not extinct until the ninth man: and thence they are not of kindred, the proprietary being extinct.

58. If a lord in court assign a pleader and a guider to one who has a suit for land and soil, or other matter to which they are pertinent; and the claimant, or the guider, speak to his disadvantage, and to the support of the other party; the law says, that the pleader is not to suffer advantage to be taken of that word, unless he himself will it; for he is the speaker, and ought to know.

situation of a defending party bound to answer to his plaint. The substance and cause of his plaint is, that the present David is wrongfully holding a well-known quantity of Welsh breyr land, within the maenor of *Llan Ddeusant, against the right of the present Morgan the black. The quantity of land is a thousand erwes of furrow land, by the measure of the rod of Howel the good; and a thousand erwes of wild land, and woodland, and hay land, and pasture land, by the measure of the same rod. And the manner and form the present David wrongfully holds the aforesaid land, in opposition to the present Morgan the black; to wit, by there being formerly a person, the true owner of the said land within the said maenor, which was Cadwgawn Vychan, son of Cadwgawn, son of Grufudd, one of the ancestors of the present Morgan, and of the present David Vychan likewise, by carrying the kin up to the said holding stock; and that in the manner that land is to be demanded through kin and descent; to wit, the said Cadwgawn Vychan the holding stock having two lawfully entitled sons; to wit, Howel, son of Cadwgawn, and Grufudd, son of Cadwgawn. And the above Howel had a lawfully entitled son, who was called Trahaearn, son of Howel; and the above Grufudd had a lawfully entitled son, who was called Maredudd, son of Grufudd; and the above Trahaearn had a lawfully entitled son, who was called Morgan, son of Trahaearn; and, on the other part, the above Maredudd had a lawfully entitled son, who was called David, son of Maredudd; and the above Morgan, son of Trahaearn, had a lawfully entitled son, to wit, the present Morgan the black; and, on the other part, the said David, son of Maredudd, had a lawfully entitled son, to wit, David Vychan, son of David, son of Maredudd, present, who is wrongfully holding the land aforesaid, he and his said former elders in succession, unlawfully, in opposition to the present Morgan the black, and in opposition to his former elders; the which land would have descended to the present Morgan, in part, on behalf of his former elders; to wit, the fourth part, through heirs; and that would be the well-known quantity, which we have named before, within the maenor of Llan Ddeusant; the which land is holden under the rod of this session. And on account of the present David holding the said land, in opposition to the present Morgan, and unwilling to restore it to him, as would be lawfully appropriate in respect to sharing, and in respect to kins; and he appearing within time, and before the closure of law between him and his land; and he being a fourth person from the holding stock; and having made disturbance and damage, on account of the land, he and his elders before him, to wit, by breaking of ploughs upon the land; and plaints, on account of he, the said Morgan the black, being at all times ready to receive the land, on its being restored. And a negative has been at all times, on the part of the present David; and for that is the plaint of the present Morgan; and for continuing that by covert and detention, included in the third detention there is against law: the detention of a person's right and due beyond the time for restoring it. The time for restoring it was, when the present Morgan demanded it, before plaint. The length of time that the present David has been holding that land wrongfully, in opposition to the present Morgan, is twenty-four years to the kalends of May last past. And, also, that the present David is a person competent in law to do right, and to receive it at all times; and that the present Morgan is prepared at all times to verify, by the oaths of elders of the country, his descent from the holding stock, if there be who shall doubt the present Morgan's being a person competent in law, at all times, to obtain right and to do it. Requiring a lawful answer, on account of its being a time when the law is open as to land, which shall be demanded through kin and descent, to wit, the ninth day from the kalends of May. And, if David be so forward as to deny, the present Morgan is prepared to verify, where the law may to the utmost decide, according to record and judgment and verdict.

V. A PLAINT FOR PLOUGHING LAND SURREPTITIOUSLY.

A pursuer of lawful plaint am I to the lord of this session, and to his officers, and, as being the principal officer of them, to the canghellor, who is supporting the privilege of the rod of this session, this day, against the present David, son of Llywelyn, son of Gwilym, who is, in the situation of a defending party, bound to answer my plaint. The matter and cause of my plaint is, to wit: that the present David came within a certain day, to wit, Monday next after Candlemas day last past within this year, to where I was owner of land, within the maenor of *Mabon, the which maenor is holden under the rod of this session. And that the present David came with six oxen, with plough and irons, and he himself, in the character of ploughman, with a driver, and turned a thousand furrows, by measure, surreptitiously, and against the protection of the lord. This surreption was shown to such as it was due to show it; to wit, the land borderers, and to the officers of the lord; and the said David is holding that by covert and detention, in the third detention there is against law: causing injury to a person, or to his property, without doing either right or peace therefor. And, in respect to such injury, I am requiring relief, as the law may set forth, to wit: four legal pence, for putting the plough in the ground; and four legal pence for taking the plough out of the ground; and a curt penny for opening each furrow that the plough turned; and the six oxen, and the plough, and the irons, and the yokes, as wails to the lord; with the worth of the right foot of the ploughman, and the worth of the right hand of the driver. And further, that the present David is a person competent in law to do right, and to receive it; and I a person competent in law to do right, and to receive it, if there be who shall require it of me. Application to David, to know if he would do right, before plaint; and a negative was every time, on his part: and on account of the negative by David is my plaint. Requiring a timely answer.

who is supporting the privilege of the rod of this session to-day, against the present Morgan Vychan, son of Morgan the black, who is, in the situation of a defending party, bound to answer my plaint. The matter and cause of my plaint is, to wit: that the present Morgan came within a certain day, the Tuesday next after the feast day of St. Dewi last past within this year, to where I was owner of wood, within the maenor of ⁴Gwinvai, the which maenor is holden under the rod of this session. And that the present Morgan came with a fuel hatchet of steel and iron, and did cut two branching oaks, that would have been worth six score curt pence, each of them; and twelve white hazels, that would be worth fifteen curt pence, each of them; and six black thorns, that would be worth seven pence halfpenny, each of them; and nine willows, and ash, and alder, that would be worth sixpence of the curt pennies, each of them. And that the present Morgan is holding that by covert and detention, in the third detention there is against law: causing injury to a person, or to his property, without doing either right or peace therefor: the which injury has been shown to such as it was right to show it, the land-borderers, and to the officers of the lord. And further, that the present Morgan is a person competent in law to do right, and to receive it; and that the present David is a person competent in law to do right, and to receive it, if there be who shall require it. Application by David to Morgan, to know if he would do right, before plaint; and a negative was every time, on the part of the said Morgan: and on account of the negative by Morgan is my plaint. Requiring a timely answer.

If the said John shall be so positive and wilful as to deny the setting up of the wrong cross, in the form and manner that has been mentioned: God and twelve to its having been set up by him. If he acknowledge it, let him pay fifteen shillings of the money before spoken of to the lord.

XV. A PLAINT OF SURREPTION.

The extent of the plaint of John Holland against John, son of Llywelyn, a plaint of surreption. The cause and matter of the surreption is, the coming of the said John on the Monday next after the feast of St. Michael the archangel last past within this year, into the trev of Ereiviad, in the cymwd of Is Aled, within the territory of Edward, king of England, lord of this land; and, in the place, day, and time I have named, took away a horse, black in colour, of my property, surreptitiously, the which was of the value of ten shillings of gold, or silver, of the current money of the

If the said John be so positive and wilful as to deny it : God and twelve, to his having done so. If he acknowledge it, I am ready to take nisi ; and let him do right to the court : and so forth.

XVI. [A PLAINT OF KIN AND DESCENT.]

Naturally the present N. is under your jurisdiction, and the cause is, to wit, that the present N. is wrongly holding a certain quantity of Welsh breyr land within the place and session that thou mayest appoint. The manner the present N. is wrongly holding the said land, in opposition to the right of the before-mentioned —, to wit, that some one formerly was owner of the said land, to wit, N. ; and that to the said N. there were two sons by legitimate marriage, to wit, Thomas and Rys ; the which Rys held the said land wrongfully and unlawfully, in opposition to Thomas ; and the above Thomas had a son by legitimate marriage, to wit, Morgan, son of Thomas. And on the other part there was a son, to wit, Rytherch, son of N. ; the which Rytherch held the said land against the right of the said N. ; and to the said N. there was a son, to wit, M. present ; and on the other part there was a proprietary son, to wit, N., who is present, and wrongly holding the said land, against the right of the present N. and his senior against the aforesaid senior, and [refusing to] restore it, as he ought to do, according to sharing, and according to kins, to obtain the third share, the which would descend to him from the holding stock, and he M. being the third person of the kin and descent ; to wit, the ninth day of the month of May. And that the said N. is holding that by covert and detention, in the third detention there is against law : the detention of a person's due beyond the time for restoring it. The time for restoring it was on Monday and Tuesday and Wednesday that I have mentioned before ; to wit, the time, and the days, that he wrongfully held the said land, were the Monday and Tuesday and Wednesday after the calends of May last past, in this year. And that the present N. is a person competent in law to do right, and to answer, if there be who shall require it. I made application to N. to know whether he would do right, before plaint ; and a negative has been on the

XVII. A PLAINT OF SARAAD.

The extent of the plaint of John, son of Jenkin, son of Madog, who is present at the bar, a plaint of saraad. To wit, the said Thomas came on Wednesday, after mid-day, in the first week of the month of March, within the season of spring, in this year, within the trev of Bacheurig, in the cymwd of *Llanerch, in the lordship of Sir Edmund Gray lord of this country; and in the place, day, and time made an assault and onset upon the said John, and struck him on his left arm, so as to break skin, and flesh, and veins, until the blood flowed to the ground, with a spear of steel, and head of iron, and shaft of ash wood, by the strength of his right hand and arm, and his left hand and his left arm, and the strength of his body in addition thereto. He is preferring his request this day for three kine, subject to their augmentation of twenty pence of good silver upon each cow; and twenty-four pence for the worth of blood. The cause for his making his request is, as being neither more nor less than an innate boneddig.

And thus terminates the book of Trev Alun, of the handwriting of Gutyn Owain.

BOOK THE THIRTEENTH.

I. LLYMA DRIOEDD DYVNWAL MOELMUD, A ELWIR TRIOEDD Y CLUDAU A THRIOEDD Y CARGLUDAU.

I. Tair clud gyvarwedd y sydd: barddoniaeth; govaniaeth; a thelynoriaeth. Neu val hyn, tair clud gyvannedd y sydd, yn mraint devodau cenedl y Cymry: bardd; feryllt; a thelynior.

II. Tri pheth a wnant glud-gartrev: cenedl; braint; a rhyvel.

III. Tri chartrevoldeb y sydd: cyviaith; cyvar; a chyvarv.

IV. Tair clud arvoll y sydd: cynghaws; cyvathrach; a difyn: sev nawdd a chyvnawdd.

I. THESE ARE THE TRIADS OF DYVNWAL MOELMUD, WHICH ARE CALLED THE TRIADS OF MOTES, AND TRIADS OF CAR-MOTES.

1. There are three social motes: bardism; metallurgy; and the science of a harpist. Or thus, there are three domestic motes, under the privilege of the customs of the kindred of the Cymry: that of a bard; a metalist; and a harper.

2. Three things that make a mote-home: kindred; privilege; and war.

3. There are three domesticities: common language; co-tillage; and mutual armament.

4. There are three motes of concurrence: council; intermarriage; and defence: that is, protection and mutual protection.

* Near St. Asaph, in the lordship of the Vale of Clwyd.

v. Tair clud gyvnawdd y sydd: dinau-clud; mesori; a chyvar: sev yw dyled i bawb ei law yn a vetro.

vi. Tair clud udcorn y sydd: dygynnull gwlad gan riaint a phencenedloedd; corn cynhauav; a chorn cad a rhyvel, rhag gormes gorwlad ac estron.

vii. Tair clud gyvarv y sydd: rhag estron a gormes gorwlad; rhag a doront vrait a chyvraith; a rhag gwylltvilod rheipus.

viii. Tair clud gymhorth y sydd: beirdd yn eu cylch clera; dymchwel o ryvel; ac eillion yn nawdd cenedl y Cymry.

ix. Tair clud ddychwel y sydd: iaith; braint; a chenedl. Neu, o vodd arall: ceraint; cyvar; a chyviaith: sev nis gellir carddychwel yn ddiormes, oni bydd un o'r tri dros hyny.

x. Tair clud ormes y sydd: symud car heb vrait, heb genad; cyrch gosgordd estron, heb rybudd, heb ammod; a barn, heb wlad, heb ynad; neu, heb wlad ac arglwyddi rhiaint.

xi. Tair clud varlin y sydd: cenedl gysevin yn ngorsedd gwlad a rhiaint; ynad, a'i bleidorion, yn myned gan varn a chyvraith; a thywysawg, a'i osgordd, yn myned yn rhyvel gorwlad: sev yw barlin, rhiaint a phencenedloedd, neu beneiviaid cenedl a chynghaws.

xii. Tair clud y sydd, ac ar y lle delont eu cynnal a'u porthi: a vont yn mraint barlin; a vont yn mraint beirdd; ac a vont yn mraint amddivad.

xiii. Tair clud addwyn y sydd: beirdd yn darogan heddwch; cyrch cynhauav; a phriodas.

xiv. Tair clud gymmrawd y sydd: dygynnull gwlad a rhiaint, yn dosparth cyvreithiau a barn cywlad; beirdd yn athrawon gwybodau, lle cyrchont yn ngorsedd; a chydgyvarch cenedl, yn nghyrch golychwyd ar y privwyliau arbenigion.

xv. Tair clud vargad y sydd: cyrch gelyn gorwlad; llev, neu gorn, murn a chynllwyn; a threv ar dan: sev y dylit gynnorthwy gan bawb.

5. There are three motes of mutual protection: an out-pouring mote; mast-gathering; and co-tillage: herein the hand of every one is required to assist according to his ability.

6. There are three horn motes: the assembling of the country by elders and chiefs of kindreds; the horn of harvest; and the horn of battle and war, against the molestation of a border country and strangers.

7. There are three motes of mutual armament: against strangers and the molestation of a border country; against those who violate privilege and law; and against ravenous wild beasts.

8. There are three motes of support: to bards in their circuit of minstrelsy; return from war; and aillts under the protection of the kindred of the Cymry.

9. There are three motes of return: language; privilege; and kindred. Or, in another manner: relatives; co-tillage; and common language: for there cannot be a car-return without molestation, unless it be under one of those three.

10. There are three motes of molestation: removal of a car without privilege, without permission; irruption of a strange retinue, without notice, without stipulation; and judgment, without country, without judge; or, without country and hereditary lords.

11. There are three motes of supremacy: a primitive kindred in a session of country and elders; a judge, and his comrades, dispensing judgment and law; and a prince, with his retinue, going to a border-country war: supremacy implies, elders and chiefs of kindreds, or the chieftains of a kindred and council.

12. There are three motes, and wherever they come, they are to have support and maintenance: those who have the privilege of supremacy; those who have the privilege of bards; and those who are under the privilege of destitution.

13. There are three respectable motes: bards proclaiming peace; ingathering of harvest; and a marriage.

14. There are three motes of consociation: a convention of a country and elders, arranging the laws and judgments of a common country; bards as teachers of sciences, where they assemble in session; and the congress of a kindred, at a meeting for worship on the principal high festivals.

15. There are three motes of imminent attack: the inroad of a border-country enemy; the cry, or the horn, of murder and waylaying; and a hamlet on fire: for assistance is required from every body.

xvi. Tri chorn cynghlud y sydd: corn cynhauav; corn dadlau; a chorn golychwyd.

xvii. Tair clud gynhwrw y sydd: corn gwlad; llongau o wlad estron yn medru tir; ac annychwel cenad gwlad a rhiaint o wlad estron.

xviii. Tair clud gyvarch y sydd: aredig; gwylgampau; a goddeithio coedydd: sev, o gyvarch, nis dylit eu battal.

xix. Tri chyvarch gwlad: corn cychwyn; gwaedd yn llys; a gosteg golychwyd.

xx. Tair clud anghyvarch y sydd: helwriaeth; ydgyrch; a chlawdd haiarn: sev nid rhaid cyvarch o a'u cyrchont. Neu, o vodd arall, nid rhaid cyvarch eu cyrchu.

xxi. Tair clud ymlid y sydd: blaidd; gwilliaid; a chi cyndeiriog: a phawb a glywont y gwaedd a ddylynt ymgdygyrch.

xxii. Tair dinaclud y sydd: cyrch estron yn anghyvarch; anrhaith gorwlad; a chnud bleiddiau.

xxiii. Tair clud vrciniawl y sydd: cylch brenin neu riain yn eu cyvoethau; cyrch beirdd yn ngorsedd gyvallwy; a chyrch dwyvolion yn ngolychwyd. Ac yn rhai llyfrau val hyn: cyrch yngneidiaeth; cyrch beirdd a chler; a chyrch golychwyd.

xxiv. Tair cludgyrch vrciniawl, o addwyn-der gwarantedig cenedl y Cymry y sydd, ac ni ddylit a elai yn eu herbryn: cyrch cenad gorwlad; cyrch beirdd gorwlad yn ngorsedd wrth vrain a devawd beirdd ynys Prydain; a chyrch eillion yn hedd ac yn nawdd Duw a'i dangnev.

xxv. Tair clud gychwyn gyfredin y sydd: serch budd; a gochel cosp; ac anmraint.

xxvi. Tair clud ddeol y sydd: murn a chynllwyn; brad teyrnedd, sev brad gwlad a chenedl; ac anrhaithledrad amwyllyn-iawg: sev y dylai pawb yn nghlyw y corn, fordd y cerdder, vyned yn nghyrch y deol hyny, bob rhyw ac oedran; a chynnal cyvarth gan gwn, yn ydd eler hyd rhoddi ar vor, ac ydd elo a ddeoler driugeinawr o'r golwg.

16. There are three horns of joint mote: the horn of harvest; the horn of pleadings; and the horn of worship.

17. There are three motes of commotion: the horn of the country; ships from a strange country effecting a landing; and the non-return of the messenger of a country and elders from a foreign country.

18. There are three motes of request: for tillage; festal games; and the burning of woods: for, upon a request, they are not to be impeded.

19. Three requisitions of a country: the horn of march; a cry in court; and the announcement of worship.

20. There are three motes without requisition: hunting; ingathering of corn; and an iron mine: for it is not necessary for such as resort to them to make a request. Or, in another way, it is not necessary to interrogate those resorting to them.

21. There are three motes of pursuit: after a wolf; after thieves; and after a mad dog: and all who shall hear the cry are to assemble together.

22. There are three out-pouring motes: the approach of strangers without permission; the depredation of a border country; and a pack of wolves.

23. There are three privileged motes: the progress of the king or of elders in their territories; the progress of bards to competent session; and the progress of the religious to worship. And in some books thus: the progress of judicature; the progress of bards and minstrels; and progress for worship.

24. There are three privileged mote resorts, conceded by the courtesy of the kindred of the Cymry, and to which there ought to be no opposition: the approach of a border-country messenger; the approach of border-country bards to a session under the privilege and custom of the bards of the isle of Britain; and the approach of aillts under the peace and protection of God and his peace.

25. There are three common motes of departure: a desire of gain; the avoiding of punishment; and the lack of privilege.

26. There are three motes of banishment: for murder and waylaying; treason against the state, or treachery to the country and kindred; and irretrievable spoliation: for it is required of every body of every sex and age within hearing of the horn, in the direction taken, to accompany the progress of that exile; and keep up the barking of dogs, to the period of putting to sea, and until the one banished shall have gone three score hours out of sight.

xxvii. Tair clud gymhill y sydd, a govyn cynghlud ar bob dyledawg cynnwynawl: cyrch yn ngorseddau gwlad a chenedl; cyrch rhyvel gorwlad; a chyrch carllawedrawg; sev yw carllawedrawg, un a vo braint symud ei gar, neu ei vwd, pan y myno.

xxviii. Tri charllawedrawg y sydd: anghydvrwd; ac anghyttir; ac a vo wrth vrait o bencenedl: sev yw carllawedrawg, a vo braint iddo symud ei gar lle y myno, neu symud i arall o van, heb golli braint a brodoriaeth yn y lle y symuto o hano, tra nad elo yn ngwlad gelyn ac estron; sev yw gwlad estron, amgen o briv genedl; a gorwlad, amgen o gyvoeth o'r un briv genedl.

xxix. Tair clud gyvattal y sydd: pen-cenedl; priodasawg; ac a vo wrth wydd gwlad a chyvoeth: a chargyvattal a'u gelwir, am nis gellir eu hebgor yn ngwlad a chenedl.

xxx. Tair clud vanawg y sydd: pen-cenedl, a'i osgordd; beirdd, a'u noddedigion o awenyddion; ac ynad, a'i wyr llys: sev yn man y bont, y bydd eu braint a'u trwydded.

xxxi. Tair clud gyvran y sydd: braint clud varlin; ar gysevin; a helwriaeth: sev y bydd i'r rhai hyn hawl a chyvran yn y vrodoriaeth wrth hyn o bethau, pan y myner.

xxxii. Tair clud angen y sydd: newyn yn ngwlad; daiardor, neu liveiriaint; a gortrech estron: sev rhagddynt y dervydd braint a brodoriaeth yn ngwlad, a myned o'r genedl ar encil, ac yno dechreu o'r newydd yn nghymmrawd y genedl.

xxxiii. Tair caethglud y sydd: gelyn gorvodedig; a gwilliaid cywlad; a chychwyn anghenad, sev a symudo ei gar, neu ei vwd, heb vrait, heb genad: ar tri rhyw hyn o ddynion a ddoder yn nghaethglud, ac yn eillion, hyd yn mhen y nawved ach.

xxxiv. Tair clud gynniwair y sydd: bugeiliaid trevgordd yn arail eu preiddiau; ymlid gwylltvlod rheipus, gan gorn gwlad;

LAWS, II.

27. There are three motes of convergency, and requiring the joint movement of every innate proprietor: resort to the sessions of country and kindred; the approach of a border-country war; and the approach of one with shattered-car; one with shattered-car implies, one who has the privilege of removing his car, or his hut, when he willeth.

28. There are three persons with shattered-car: one without relations; one without land; and one who is dependent upon the privilege of a chief of kindred: one with shattered-car is, such as hath the privilege of removing his car wheresoever he willeth, or of removing to another place, without loss of privilege and civil rights in the place from which he may remove, so long as he shall not go to the country of an enemy and a stranger; the country of a stranger is, one differing from the primitive kindred; and a border country is, one not under the same government as the primitive kindred.

29. There are three motes of constraint: a chief of kindred; a married person; and one attached to an office of a country and dominion: and they are called car-constrained, because they cannot be dispensed with by a country and kindred.

30. There are three pre-eminent motes: a chief of kindred, with his retinue; bards, with their wards of noviciates; and a judge, with his men of the court: for wherever they shall be, there they have their privilege and maintenance.

31. There are three motes of participation: the privilege of the mote of supremacy; common tillage; and hunting: for there is claim and coparticipation in the social system in these things, when it may be willed.

32. There are three motes of necessity: a famine in a country; rupture of the earth, or inundations; and conquest by strangers: for, on account of these, privilege and civil rights become extinct in a country, and the kindred betakes itself to flight, and then begins anew in its confraternity.

33. There are three bond motes: a vanquished enemy; the banditti of a federate country; and an unpermitted departure, by one who shall remove his car, or his hut, without privilege, without permission: and these three kinds of persons are to be consigned to bondage, as aillts, unto the end of the ninth descent.

34. There are three hovering motes: herdsmen of a hamlet tending their herds; the pursuit of ravenous wild beasts, with a beirdd, yn darogan wrth raid gwlad a chenedl.

Ac velly tervyna.

A thriodd y cargludau a'u gelwir; a Dyvnwal Moelmud, brenin y Cymry, a'u cadarnaes, er dangaws a vai iawn a chyvraith mewn gwlad a chenedl. A goreu deddwr a vu erioed oedd Dyvnwal Moelmud; a goreu am vrait a nawdd i vrodawr ac aillt, rhag bod neb a wnelai yn ngham ac yn anghyvraith. A gwedy hyny, Hywel dda, brenin Cymru oll, a'u cadarnaes, yn gauedig, yn erbyn a'u gwrthreithiai ac a'u gwrthvreiniai.

II. LLYMA EREILL O DRIOEDD DYVNWAL MOELMUD, A ELWIR TRIOEDD GWLADOLDEB A CHYWLADOLDEB; SEV YDYNT HEN DRIOEDD BREINIAU A DEVODAU CENEDL Y CYMRU, CYN COLLI EU BRAINT A'U COBON, O DRAIS, A THWYLL, A BRAD Y SAESON.

i. Tair sail gwladoldeb: braint; meddiant; a chyvraith.

ii. Tair sail cyvraith: amddifyn; cosp; ac anrhydedd, parth ag at a wneler er lles gwlad a chenedl.

iii. Tri nawdd ac amddifyn gwladoldeb: nawdd bywyd a chorf; nawdd meddiant ac addev; a nawdd braint gynenid.

iv. Tri pheth a ddifynant wladoldeb: cariad; ovn; a chymmudd.

v. Tri pheth a gadarnaant wladoldeb: nawdd gadarn i bob dyn, a'i eiddo; cosp gyviawn, lle a'i dylit; a thrugaredd, o gyviawnder, lle a'i gweler yn ovyniadawl, gan achaws gyviawn.

vi. Tri pheth a ddyvethant wladoldeb: creulonder yn lle cosp; trugaredd, o gariad a pharch, yn gwyrw cyviawnder; a thwyll gymmrawd, lle nas cafer nawdd gynnedd-vawl i bob dyn, ai brodawr ai aillt y bo.

vii. Tair colovn gwladoldeb: teyrnedd; rhaith gwlad; ac yngneidiaeth.

viii. Tri pheth a ddylit ar bob un o'r tair colovn hyn: iawn i bawb; nawdd ac amddifyn i bawb; a dosparthau hydrevn er addysg, a gwybodaeth, a chov, i bawb or vrodoriaeth.

the horn of the country; and bards, proclaiming on the exigency of a country and kindred.

And thus it terminates.

And they are called the triads of the car-motes; and Dyvnwal Moelmud, king of the Cymry, authorised them, for the purpose of showing what was right and law in a country and kindred. And Dyvnwal Moelmud was the best legislator that ever appeared; and the best in securing privilege and protection both to native and aillt, lest any one should act wrongly and unlawfully. Afterwards, Howel the good, king of all Cymru, confirmed them, to be in force, in opposition to any that should introduce contrary judicature and contrary privileges.

II. THESE ARE OTHER TRIADS OF DYVNWAL MOELMUD, CALLED THE TRIADS OF THE SOCIAL STATE AND FEDERATE STATE; AND WHICH ARE THE ANCIENT TRIADS OF THE PRIVILEGES AND CUSTOMS OF THE KINDRED OF THE CYMRU, BEFORE THEY LOST THEIR PRIVILEGE AND THEIR CROWN, THROUGH THE RAPACITY, FRAUD, AND TREACHERY OF THE SAXONS.

1. Three foundations of a social state: privilege; possession; and law.

2. Three foundations of law: security; punishment; and honour, in respect to what shall be done for the benefit of a country and kindred.

3. Three protections and securities of a social state: protection of life and person; protection of possession and dwelling; and protection of natural privilege.

4. Three things that defend a social state: love; fear; and mutual advantage.

5. Three things that confirm a social state: effectual protection to every person, and to his property; just punishment, where it is due; and mercy, blended with justice, where it is seen requisite, from a just cause.

6. Three things that destroy a social state: cruelty instead of punishment; mercy, out of affection and respect, perverting justice; and fraud of confraternity, where natural protection is not to be obtained for every person, whether he be a native or an aillt.

7. Three columns of a social state: the kingly office; raith of country; and judicature.

8. Three things are required from each of these three pillars: equity to all; protection and defence to all; and well-ordered regulations for the instruction, knowledge, and remembrance, of every one in the community.

ix. Tri pheth a gadarnaant ar wladoldeb : nerth ; nawdd ; a chosp, o gyviawnder cyvraith gynneddvaidd.

x. Tri devnydd cyvraith : gwybodaeth ; iawn cynenid ; a chydwybod.

xi. Tri thlws gwladoldeb : ysgolaig dysgedig ; feryllt celvydd ; ac ynad cyviawn.

xii. Tri phrawv ynad : gwybod y gyvraith ; gwybod devodau gwlad, na chiau cyvraith yn eu herbyn ; a gwybod syrth ei amserau, a'u dichweiniau.

xiii. Tri pheth y dylai ynad ymarver ag wynt yn wastad : gwirionedd cynneddvawl ; trugaredd cydwybodawl ; a gwybodau ced-eirnbwyll.

xiv. 9. Three things that give stability to a social state: power; protection; and punishment, consistent with the justice of established law.

10. Three elements of law: knowledge; natural right; and conscientiousness.

11. Three ornaments of a social state: a learned scholar; a scientific artist; and a righteous judge.

12. Three proofs of a judge: knowledge of the law; knowledge of the customs of the country, which the law does not nullify; and a knowledge of law times, with their contingencies.

13. Three things that a judge ought constantly to habituate himself to: fundamental truth; conscientious mercy; and profoundly reasoned sciences.

14. Three things necessary for a judge, in order that he may know and act conscientiously just as to every claim and plea brought before him: to be anxious of being inwardly actuated by the truth, and discover it by his own innate reason; to be inquisitive, in order to learn from another person, and through other circumstance, what may be the truth; and to be subtle in examining and finding out whatever deceit there may be in any plaint that may occur in his court, and which, if taken in its tendency, might conceal or darken the truth, and thus might cause error in the decision he might pronounce, although acting conscientiously: for a judge ought thoroughly to understand whatever should come before him, before he could pronounce a just and conscientious judgment.

15. Three primary obligations attached to the kingly office: to splendidly support itself; to establish the knowledge of political sciences, to be enabled to depend on constitutional right and law, and upon country and sovereignty; and to strengthen the protection of those who are true and loyal of the kindred and the community, and the protection due to aillts under the protection of the community.

16. Three oppressions of the kingly office: injustice, or neglect in affording protection to faithful subjects and their properties; spoliation, that is, theft, murder, and waylaying, and the strengthening of injustice, thus opposing a barrier against country and law; and indifference, which implies want of consideration in respect to the changes of times and circumstances, and other urgencies, where they may operate in opposition to law, and which cannot be abolished except by raith of country and king, to examine and become

17. Three splendid honours of the kingly office : protection of faithful subjects ; the punishment and riddance of evil-doers ; and riddance of ignorance between true-man and true-man, and securing just judgment between them.

18. Three supports of law : a learned judge ; a faithful witness ; and a conscientious raith.

19. There are three strong punishments : forfeiture of life ; cutting off a limb ; and banishment from the country, by the cry and pursuit of men and dogs : and it is for the king to direct which he willeth to be inflicted.

20. There are three modes of punishment by the forfeiture of life : beheading ; hanging ; and burning : and it is for the king, or lord of the territory, to order which he willeth to be inflicted.

21. There are three punishments by power : distress of property ; imprisonment, and loss of privilege ; when privilege shall be forfeited, there is a lapse to the condition of an aillt unto the end of the ninth descent.

22. There are three punishments by camlwrw : making a distress where a claim is not paid ; imposing service and labour upon him who shall be punished, until released by paying the saraad ; and public reproof, and that is, proclaiming by horn and cry of country, in every court, and church, and fair, and market, and in every regular assembly, the punishable crime of the person rebuked : neither can any one of these three be remitted, except by paying a lawful camlwrw.

23. There are three mitigating reasons towards relieving the court and judge from awarding strong punishment : a mother screening her children ; a youth before growth of beard ; and a stranger, unacquainted with the language, who shall act in opposition to the law and community.

24. There are three assoigns in law for remitting a strong punishment : inability ; ignorance ; and extreme necessity : and these three things excuse from inflicting strong punishment, and release therefrom.

25. Three persons who are not to be punished : one born deaf and dumb ; a child before it attains understanding ; and a natural idiot : it is said, an idiot is not to be subject to punishment ; but warning to the country is to be in writing upon the king's posts or stones, as a strong caution for every body to avoid the idiot, and the one born deaf and dumb; and thus they are subjected to their marks, by the horn and cry of the country and federate country; on that account it is said: the idiot goes upon the post.

26. Three mutual bonds of a country and kindred: paternity; filiation; and fraternity: that is, paternity is the kingly office, caring, and regulating, and providing for the fair support of a community; filiation, acting in obedience to the paternity, for the sake of order and just government; and fraternity, in unity of intention with the other two in their respective stations, mutually aiding towards strengthening the polity of a country and kindred, and the regulating kingly office.

27. Three mutual bonds of a community and kindred: secured liberty; privileges of uniform quality; and equitable laws.

28. Three embellishments of a community: the sciences of wisdom; useful arts; and a courteously conducted magnificence.

29. Three supports of sciences and arts: instruction imparted by teachers under privilege and sanction; the immunity of the sciences and the arts to those who are skilled in them; and rewards established by law for what shall be skilfully executed, according to request and contract, by men of science and artists.

30. Three effective foundations of a federate community: clear and perspicuous principles, not to be controverted by prudence; effective privilege, not to be opposed consistently with equity; and an effective dispensation of justice, not to be annulled by any person however eminent by privilege and office.

31. Three things that destroy a social state and federate community: oppressive privileges; unjust administration of law; and unconcern, causing confusion in the regulations of a country and kindred.

32. Three things that cannot remain permanent but whilst they stand upon the three effective foundations: law; property; and the tranquillity of a kindred.

33. Three things that are the elements of every law of mutual obligation: power; right; and conscientiousness.

34. Three essentials of just judgment: a profoundly reasoning mind; a social morality in the laws; and a conscientious raith of judge and sovereign.

35. Three originations of the kingly office: the necessity of a country and federate country; the reasoning of the wise; and a declaration by raith of country and community.

XXXVI. Tri anhebgor gwladoldeb : ar-glwydd, yn vrenin; rhaith gwlad; ac yngneidiaeth.

XXXVII. Tri anhebgor cywladoldeb: teyrnedd benadur; rhaith gymmrawd; a barn dygynnull cywlad, yn mraint a'i govynai, ai gwr gwlad, ai gwr gorwlad y byddai.

XXXVIII. Tri anhebgor pob un o'r tri hyny: pwyll o gymhrawv dichweiniau; cyviaiawnder o gydwybod; a chariad brawdol rhwng gwlad a chywlad, a rhwng gwr a gwlad, a rhwng gwr a gwr: a lle nas byddont, nid hawdd gwared rhag anweledig o ammrawd ac anghyviaiawnder.

36. Three indispensables of the social state: a lord, as king; raith of country; and judicature.

37. Three indispensables of a federal community: supreme kingly office; raith of mutual legislation; and conventional judgment of a federate country, under the privilege of such as may require it, whether a man of the country, or a man of a border country.

38. Three indispensables of each of the three former: consideration from mutual proof of circumstances; justice arising from conscientiousness; and brotherly love between a country and federate country, and between a man and a country, and between man and man: and where these are wanting, it is not easy to provide against unforeseen disunion and injustice.

39. Three original intentions of a federate state: mutual defence; mutual protection of sciences and arts; and the support of peaceable habits and usages.

40. Three things that cannot acquire stability and maintenance without a federate community: the cultivation of the earth; the arts and other privileged sciences; and a state of regulated tranquillity.

41. Three things that consolidate the tranquillity of a federate country: the privileges of mutual judicature; a community of equal privilege; and the sciences of wisdom, under the joint protection of a federate state, emanating from judicature and natural privilege.

42. Three mutual ties of a federate community: identity of language; identity of judicature; and identity of privilege: and without these there cannot be a powerful federate community.

43. Three embellishments of a federate community: praiseworthy sciences; amiable bearing; and a well regulated mutual judicature.

44. Three things that constitute a country: relatives; language; and privileges: and they are called the three mutual bonds of a country.

45. Three mutual ties of a social state: mutual protection; co-tillage; and equal judicature: and without these there can be neither a country nor a community.

46. Three things without which there is no country: common language; common judicature; and co-tillage land: for without these a country cannot support itself in peace and social union.

47. Three primary qualifications of a powerful community: privileged arts; the sciences of wisdom; and agriculture: for from these three all other characteristics of the social state originate; and before primary qualifications there can be no secondary qualifications; on that account, the indispensables of a social state are to establish, in a privileged and deter-minate form, the three primary qualifications.

48. Three things without which a country is not a good one: wood; stones; and springs of water.

49. Three things in common to a country and kindred: mast woods; hunting; and an iron mine: and exclusive ownership is not to be claimed to one or the other of them.

50. Three exclusive appropriations belonging to a man from the three things in common to a country and kindred, to wit:
venison after the skin is taken off it; a collection of mast; and iron ore taken out of the mine.

51. Three peculiar appropriations of a man of a country in a social state, or who is a native Cymro by originality of privilege: a house; a cattle-fold; and a corn-yard.

52. Three exclusive appropriations of every man distinct from another, whether he be an aillt, or a Cymro: a wife; children; and moveable property.

53. Three exclusive appropriations of every man distinct from another, and which cannot be shared with another, and which are not to be paid as camlwrw: a wife; children; and argyvreu: argyvreu imply, dress, arms, and the tools of a privileged art; because without these his just station cannot be secured to a man; and it is not right for the law to unman a man, or to deprive art of its means.

54. Three trinkets of a kindred: a book; a harp; and a sword: and they are not to be taken in distress by the sentence of court and law.

55. Three that have free maintenance in a household, and apply not to labour, occupation, or office: a child; an aged person; and a domestic teacher: for they put not hand to sword, nor to horn, nor to plough.

56. Three privileged persons against whom there is not to be a naked weapon:
a bard; a chief of kindred; and a messenger of a border country.

57. Three common persons against whom there is not to be a naked weapon: an unarmed man; a man before growth of beard; and a female.

58. Three privileged places in which no weapon is to be produced: a session of country and lord; a session of federate support, that is, a conventional session; and a session of bards.

LIX. Tair gorsedd vrciniawl ynys Prydain yn nawdd cenedl y Cymry : gorsedd beirdd, ■ hono yn hynav ei bonedd ; gorsedd gwlad ac arglwydd, sev hono, llys cyvraith ac yngneidiaeth, o ddygynnull yngnaid a brawd wyr rhaith ; a gorsedd cynghyd cynnal, sev hono, gorsedd ddygynnull gwlad a gorwlad, gan wyr teyrnedd, a phencenedlodd, a doethion gwlad a gorwlad, er deddву cymmrawd a chyvraith yn ngwlad a chywlad, a rhwng gwlad a gorwlad, o gymhwyl, a chymmrawd, a chymmod gwlad a gwlad, a theyrn a theyrn, a rhaith a rhaith, er iawn, ■ thangnev, a braint, a ddylit yn ngwlad a chywlad : ac nis dylit noethi arv rhag y rhyw orseddau o vewn eu swyddau, na rhag eu hamserodd.

59. Three privileged sessions of the isle of Britain, under the protection of the kindred of the Cymry : ■ session of bards, which is the oldest in its origin ; a session of country and lord, that is, a court of law and judicature, being an assembly of judges and raith judges ; and a session of federate support, that is, a conventional session of country and border country, consisting of princes, chiefs of kindreds, and the wise men of a country and border country, for legislating as to mutual judicature and law in country and federate country, and between country and border country, by the mutual sense, and consociation, and conciliation of country and country, prince and prince, raith and raith, for the right, tranquillity, and privilege, that ought to prevail in country and federate country : and a weapon is not to be bared in such sessions within their jurisdictions, nor in opposition to their times of assembling.

60. There are three privileged sessions, that have right to homage from those who are interested as to protection, or office, or honour, or advantage, attached to art or sciences, under the privilege and jurisdiction of one or other of those sessions ; and the homage is to be according to privilege, and is due to the session whilst in deliberation : a session of the bards of the isle of Britain, and every one doing it homage is to abide its judgment, who shall seek emolument by song and the art of bardism ; and also all who shall be under the protection of that session, within the limits of its jurisdiction and its privileges : a session of the king, or lord of a territory, with his justices, and his judges, and his breyrs, that is, every Cymro, being a landed proprietor, for the holding of a court and pleadings of law : and a session of federate support, or a conventional session of country and federate country ; and to this the two others owe homage, with all that are included in their privilege. Although the session of the bards be the most ancient in its origin, from which all sciences emanate, nevertheless, the oldest in regard to the privilege of necessity and cogency, through the sense and energy of a kindred, is the session of the conventional raith of country and federate country, for regulating and establishing the rights, protection, and defence of country and federate country, and of associated kindreds, with their distinctions as faithful members of the country and common weal ; and without it, that is the session of federate support, there could be neither privilege nor energy in either of the two other sessions ; for the session of the conventional raith of country and kindred consists of three particulars; to wit, the sense, power, and will of country and federate country, kindred and federate kindred, for the making, improving, and consolidating law and social union; and confirming rights and privilege to the inhabitants of a country and federate country with their distinctions, whether aillt, or Cymro, with power of deliberating so far as not to oppose the united whole. For the conventional session of federate country concludes every other, as to privilege, power, law, and authority, which shall not be of mutual judicature therewith. And it was under the protection of the session of federate support, that the sessions of the lord of territory and country, and the sessions of bards, first obtained their privilege and efficiency; and otherwise there is not, and there was not, any privilege at all, but what the courtesy of the country and kindred yielded to them.

61. There are three sessions according to the privilege of the country and kindred of the Cymry. First, the session of the bards of the isle of Britain, and their foundation and privilege rest upon reason, nature, and cogency; or, according to other teachers and wise men, upon reason, nature, and circumstance. And the privilege and office of those protected by the session of bards are to maintain and preserve and diffuse authorized instruction in the sciences of piety, wisdom, and courtesy; and to preserve memorial and record of every thing commendable respecting individuals and kindred; and every event of times; and every natural phenomenon; and wars; and regulations of country and kindred; and punishments; and commendable victories; and to preserve a warranted record of genealogies, marriages, nobility, privileges, and customs of the kindred of the Cymry: and to attend to the exigencies of other sessions in announcing what shall be achieved, and what shall be requisite, under lawful proclamation and warning: and further than this there is nothing either of office or of privilege attached to a session of barda. Therefore the bards are authorized teachers of the country and kindred of the Cymry; and they have emolument secured by their office, other than they are entitled to by being innate Cymry, that is, to each one his five free erws, besides the rewards of art secured to each of them. Second, the session of the country and common weal; or the session of judicature and decision of law, for the right and protection of the country and kindred, their refugees, and their aillts. These sessions act severally; that is to say, the session of federate support makes a law, where an occasion requires, and confirms it in a country and federate country; and that is not allowed to a country distinct from a federate country. The session of judgment and judicature decides upon such as shall transgress the law, and punishes him. And the session of the bards teaches commendable sciences, and decides respecting them, and methodically preserves all the memorials of the nation to insure their authenticity. And it is not right for any one of these sessions to intermeddle with the deliberation of either of the other two, but to confirm them, and to support them regularly. The third session, or that of federate support, in its original and determinate purpose is to effect what may be necessary as to any thing new, and as to the improvement of the laws of a country and federate country, by a federate raith of chiefs of kindreds, wise men, and sovereign ruler. A sovereign prince, or ruler of paramount right, is the oldest in possessive title of the kings and the princes of a federate community; and he is to raise the mighty agitation; and his word is superior to every other word in the agitation of the country.

62. There are three sessions of emergency. A functionary authorized by law purposing a regulation in the territory of his lord, to investigate a decision, or disputes, or injustice, such as the altering or opposing the laws of the king; such purpose is to hold a particular session, or convention of country and kindred, as a raith, where there shall be call and occasion; and the country is not to oppose the functionary effecting the purpose; for to no one does the privilege pertain but to the lord of enacting a law, and neither is that privilege invested in him, but with the consent of his country and kindred in convention; and there cannot be a convention without regulation as to time, place, and intention, and as to victuals, and drink, and shelter, and rest, and fire, and other conveniencies. Secondly, a session of raith of country, by chief of kindred, on account of a plaint of injustice and breach of law by the king and his judges; or, where law cannot be obtained to afford clear and permanent right; and where that shall be, it is right for every innate Cymro to have his raith; and upon his chief of kindred depends the agitation of sovereignty, with the support and assistance of his kindred and his wise men; and the country ought not to oppose him, for it is the privilege of a chief of kindred to agitate sovereignty; and to every innate Cymro that privilege pertains, under the protection of the privilege of his chief of kindred. And the oaths of three hundred men legally qualified, or those who have a title as landed proprietors, are to confirm what is done by raith of country on the agitation of a man who is an innate Cymro, under the protection and privilege of his chief of kindred. For every Cymro has a right to his voice, and his plaint, and his claim, by natural reason, under the protection and privilege of his chief of kindred; and every chief of kindred has a right to his country and his raith; and, where demanded, every raith has a right to its sovereignty; and every sovereignty has a right to its federate country in conventional raith, lest there should be suffered what would exclude law and the privilege of a community; and in this sort of protection, the privilege of every innate Cymro is his country, and his raith, and his sovereignty, and his federate country in convention. The third is for the purpose of deliberating as to the merits of two, or more, laws, where one shall be established as equivalent to the other; and from circumstances of times, and changes of the world, life, and general matters, injustice may be prevalent in the one more than the other; and right cannot be established before the wrong is known; and right ought not to be established without the knowledge of country and lord; and neither should the lord and his country so do, but with the knowledge and consent of the federate country, according to custom. For these considerations it is right, under lawful proclamation and warning of a year and a day, to hold a session of raith, with the knowledge of country and kindred, for mutual deliberation, as to what may be wrong, and for the righting of it by a proper mutual decision, and discuss the agitation so far as there may be just and necessary occasion. And where a law shall be altered, it will be necessary to warn the country and kindred properly, that they may be enabled to recognize what is substituted in the place of what is altered.

63. Three things that ought not to be accomplished but with the accordance of country and federate country and the supreme kindred: altering the law of the king; dethroning the king; and disseminating new sciences and new regulations in a session of bards; because that is not to be done before a country and kindred become cognizant of their kinds, and their qualities, and their dispositions, by the lawful judgment and exposition of the learned and the wise among the authorized

Ac ar y brenin penraith y mae cyfraw a lluniaethu rhaith cywlad, a elwir gorsedd ddygynnull, a gorsedd cywlad, a gorsedd cynghyd cynnal, a gorsedd benbaladr, a rhaith Cymry benbaladr. teachers in a competent session of the bards of the isle of Britain in country and federate country. And where proceedings shall take place in opposition thereto, by reason and deliberation, those sciences are called nullities; and no privilege or emolument attached to art ought to be assigned to them; and there is neither to law, nor system, nor art, nor any kind of knowledge of sciences, any privilege whatever, unless obtained by demonstration and learning; sanctioned by the judgment of teachers and wise men eminent for learning, sciences, and authority, under the privilege of the institutions of country and kindred. And in respect to the dethroning of a king, that ought not to occur except by raith of country and federate country; that is, from a federate country there must be the oaths of three hundred persons in a raith from every territory of a privileged lord of session, under the paramount king; and the most powerful, or greatest in number of territories, confirming what is done by raith. A paramount king is ■ king, or prince, who has the oldest title of possession of the kings of a federate country.

64. Three efficient unities ought to prevail over the country and kindred of the Cymry. Unity of country and kindred, or a Cymro is to be a Cymro in every country and territory in Cymru, and common and coequal his social privilege in one territory like another whichsoever, whilst he shall preserve his particular privilege in respect to land in the territory of his lord of court, from which he originated. The second is, unity of the sovereignty, or that there should be only one king of all Cymru; and he the oldest having title of possession of the princes of the federate country, and his word paramount to that of every other prince, and that in a convention of federate country, and no otherwise; because, in every necessity, the word of every other prince, and lord of territory, court, and session in Cymru, is paramount within his own country, or territory, in its boundaries; and the oldest having title of possession is called king of all Cymru, and king of Cymru universally: and Cymru universally implies the whole aggregate of the kindred of the Cymry in all their territories, within their boundaries, coequal in privilege and jurisdiction, one and the other, in each one, and in each other of the territories; excepting individual and separate properties and privileges that are not moveable, such as land, and office of country and court. On that account is the proverb:

baladr ac yn benbaladr. Trydydd, dyundeb cyvraith, a braint, a brawd : sev yr un gyvraith a ddylit yn mhob gwlad yn Nghymru ; a chymmraint, a chymmrawd ; a Chymro pob cynnwynawl o genedl y Cymry yn mhob gwlad a chyvoeth yn Nghymru, un gystal ac arall ; sev gwlad i bob Cymro pob gwlad yn Nghymru, heb yn angen dim, namyn priodolion gwahanredawl anghychwynawl ; am hyny y dywedir : gwlad Gymru benbaladr ; a chenedl Gymry benbaladr ; a braint Cymry benbaladr.

free to a Cymro every country in Cymru. And the supreme king is to agitate and form the federate country raith, which is called a conventional session, and federate country session, and session of confederate support, and supreme session, and supreme raith of the Cymry. And no one can accomplish separately, whether it be by man or country, what is to emanate from all specially and universally. Third, unity of law, and privilege, and judgment : for the same law ought to prevail in every country in Cymru ; and equal privilege, and equal law ; and every native of the kindred of the Cymry is a Cymro in every country and territory in Cymru, one as well as another ; that is, a country for every Cymro is every country in Cymru, without lack in anything, excepting immoveable and separate possessions ; and thence it is said : the paramount country of Cymru ; and the paramount kindred of the Cymry ; and the paramount privilege of the Cymry.

65. Three original privileges of every native Cymro, and also under the name of Cymro is included the female : the grant and fruition of five free erws, under the privilege of his origin as an innate Cymro ; and the issue of an aillt and stranger obtain this in the fourth person by legitimate marriages, that is, in the degree of seisor ; the privilege of bearing defensive arms, with their emblems, for that is not allowed but to an innate Cymro of warranted descent ; and the privilege of raith under the protection of his chief of kindred : and at the age of growth of beard they are bestowed upon a Cymro ; and upon a Cymraes when she shall marry.

66. There are three taeogs, who do not attain to the reputed descent and privilege of an innate Cymro until the end of the ninth degree : the first is a reputed son, that is, a son lawfully denied by his father ; or, in another form, according to law, because he was not born of a regular and legitimate marriage ; or, in a different form, contrary to law, and the privilege of a country and nation ; secondly, a person who shall lose his father's patrimony, and his privilege, as a punishment for evil deed, whose life is forfeited, or other crime demanding punishment ; and an aillt, or a stranger, who shall dwell in Cymru : and no one of them shall attain to the privilege and descent of an innate Cymro until the end of the ninth degree. And this regulation was introduced into the law for three reasons : as,

and in the community: to prevent the plotting of strangers and their adherents; lest alltuds obtain the lands of the innate Cymry; and to prevent nugatory marriages, and the irregular and illegal birth of children, by countenancing adultery and fornication in bush and brake. For, upon these considerations, strangers and their progeny are adjudged to be aillts; also, a reputed son, who shall be denied, and his progeny, and evil-doers of federate country, and their progeny, unto the end of the ninth descent. And every aillt, and taeog, is required to be a sworn man and appraised to the lord of the territory, and to his proprietary lord: his proprior is one who shall take him under his protection, and who shall grant him land in a tacog-trev; and an aillt is to be at the will and pleasure of such, until he shall attain the descent and privilege of an innate Cymro; and that is to be obtained by the fourth descendant of his issue by legitimate marriages with innate Cymraesae. And this is the mode of regulating those marriages: to wit, the son of an aillt, being a sworn man to the lord of the territory, who shall marry an innate Cymraes, by the consent of her kindred, is, by that marriage, in the privilege of the second degree of kin and descent; to their children attaches the privilege of the third degree; and one of those children, by intermarrying with a Cymraes of legitimate blood, assumes the fourth degree; a son by that marriage stands in the privilege of the fifth degree; and he is the grandchild of the original aillt; and that son, by intermarrying with an innate Cymraes, arises to the privilege of the sixth degree of kins; and a son by that marriage, or a great grandson of the original aillt, is of the seventh degree; and, by intermarrying with an innate Cymraes, attains to the eighth degree, under the privilege of his wife; for, it is the privilege of every innate Cymraes to advance a degree for her aillt husband with whom she shall intermarry; and the son of this great grandson, by such marriage, attains to the privilege of the ninth descent; and, therefore, he is called a seisor; for he seizes his land, or his fruition of five free erwes, with his immunity, and privilege of a chief of kindred, and every other social right due to an innate Cymro; and he becomes the stock of a kindred, or he stands in the privilege of chief of kindred to his progeny, and likewise to his seniors; for such of them as may be living, as father, or grandfather, or great grandfather, and not further, obtain in their seisor the privilege of innate Cymry: and LXVIII. Tair celvyddydd vreiniawl y sydd, a braint trwydded, nid amgen no phumerwi rhyddion tir, a chyvarwys i bob un o nadd-ynt, sev i bob gwr a'u gwyponnt yn warantedig, ac a'u gwasanaethont; yn wahanred, ac yn amgen no'r tir a ddylit iddo yn mraint Cymro cynnwynawl: sev ydynt, barddoniaeth; ferylltaeth; a llenoriaeth, neu lyvryddiaeth. Sev y dylit iddo ei bumerwi rhyddion yn mraint y gelvyddydd i bob un a vytho yn ansawdd ac yn ngwasanaeth un neu arall o'r celvyddyddau hyny, yn warantedig o athraw a gwybodau; ac ni ddylai un gwr ymarver a dwy gelvyddydd; ac, o gwna ev hyny, nid iawn iddo vrant trwydded ar amgen noc un o'r ddwy; ac nis gallawr un a wasanaetho ddwy gelvyddydd, neu ddwy swydd, ar unwaith, yn gyviawn a dosparthus.

LXIX. Tair celvyddydd ni ddylai meibion aillt eu dysgu, heb genad eu harglwyddi priodawr, ac arglwydd y cyvoeth; nid amgen, y tair celvyddydd vreiniawl: sev barddoniaeth; ferylltaeth; a llenoriaeth: ac o goddev ei arglwydd priodawr a'r brenin i vab aillt ddysgu un o'r tair celvyddydd hyn, a goddev hevyd i un neu arall vnyed yn ansawdd ac yn ngwasanaeth y celvyddyddau hyny, ac yn eu braint, yn warantedig o wybodau, ni ddylit, herwydd cyvraith, eu hattal, namyn gadael iddynt, a rhyddion tra vytho byw pob gwr yn mraint celvyddydd vreiniawl; a rhydd iddo, yn mraint ei gelvyddydd, drwydded o bumerwi rhyddion; canys braint bonedd a ddoded ar gelvyddyddau a gwybodau moliannus er yn oes oesoedd, er cyvanneddu a gwerinaw gwlad a chenedl, ac er cynneddvoli moesau ac arverau syberwyd a doethineb, a'u dysgu yn ddosparthus, ac er cyvawdd yn nhangnev, a chymmrawd i wlad a chenedl a'u cywiriaid; can nis gellir cyvannedd a he is not, in law, called the son of his father, in suits for land, but his seisor; and he is a seisor to his grandfather, and also a seisor to his great grandfather, and a seisor to his uncles, and his cousins, and his second cousins, where they, one or other, shall descend from legitimate marriages. And the seisor becomes chief of kindred to them all, after arriving at the full age of manhood; and every one of them is a man and relative to him; and his word is paramount over them, one and all; and he is not to be subjected to oath and appraisement; for, although they approach the kindred of the seisor, and possess their privileges free under the protection and privilege of their chief of kindred, they obtain not their lands, except those who individually attain the degree or privilege of the ninth descent, that is, of seisor.

68. There are three privileged arts, with the privilege of maintenance, to wit, five free erws of land, and immunity to each of them, that is, to every man who assuredly is cognizant of them, and practises them; distinct from, and in addition to the land to which he is entitled by the privilege of an innate Cymro: these are, bardism; metallurgy; and learning, or literature. That is, a title to five free erws under the privilege of the art to each one qualified and in the practice of one or other of those arts, being warranted by a teacher versed in sciences; and no man ought to be engaged in two arts; and, if he do that, he has no right to the privilege of maintenance other than from one of the two; and no one that follows two arts, or two offices, at the same time, can do so justly and regularly.

69. Three arts that aillts are not to learn, without the permission of their proprietary lords, and of the lord of the territory; to wit, the three privileged arts: bardism; metallurgy; and literature: and if his proprietary lord and the king suffer an aillt to learn any one of these three arts, and suffer likewise one or other to assume the qualification and the practice of those arts, and their privilege, warranted as to sciences, they are not, according to law, to be impeded, but to be permitted, and to be free whilst each individual shall live under the privilege of a privileged art; and open to him, under the privilege of his art, the fruition of five free erws; because the privilege of free descent has been conferred upon commendable arts and sciences from time immemorial, for settling and civilizing a country and kindred, and for rendering habitual morals and acts of courtesy and wisdom, and teaching them systematically, and for mutual protection in peace, and gwerindawd tangnevus heb gelvyddyau a gwybodau moliannus; ac ernynt nis gellir cadernid heb vrant bonedd ar a'u gwasanaethwynt. Achaws hyny, barn cyvraith a chymmrawd yw, nas dylit nac attal, na gwahardd, na divreiniaw celvyddyd, nac ychwaith y neb a'i gwasanaetho.

LXX. Tri mab rhydd o gaeth y sydd: nid amgen, bardd; feryllt; a gwr llen: o veibion eillion. Sev cyd y bo caeth y tad, a mab aillt, neu daiawg, rhydd vydd y mab a ddyel yn ansawdd, a gwasanaeth, a braint swydd, un neu arall o'r tair celvyddyd vreiniolion; a rhydd tra bo byw: ac iawn iddo, yn mraint ei gelvyddyd, ei bumerwi rhyddion; sev nis dylit na chaeth, na divraint, a wypo ac a vedro wasanaethu celvyddyd yn warantedig o wybodau. Eisioes, cyd y bont ryddion y cyvryw wyr wrth gelvyddyd, caethion a meibion aillt vydd eu meibion hwy; ac ev a'u gelwir tri mab caeth o rydd; ac eillion vyddant, oni chyrcher gradd goresgynydd ar ach a bonedd, ac o hyny braint Cymro cynnwynawl. Eisioes, doethion a ddywedant, y dylit gradd angholladwy ar gelvyddyd vreiniawl; achaws hyny, barn yw, mai nes vydd yr hiliogaeth i radd goresgynydd o gafaeliad braint celvyddyd; a lle nis gellir namyn ar y pedwerygwr braint goresgynydd, o ach ac epil a phriodasau, ev a ellir hyny ar y trydygwr, yn mraint celvyddyd; canys pob gwasanaeth celvyddyd vreiniawl a ddyddwg ei gradd yn nes at oresgynaeth gyonwynawl, no phei heb hyny y bythawr; canys iawn i gelvyddyd vreiniawl ei gradd, yn nhreigl bonedd hyd oresgynaeth. Sev y dywedir, o chaniataa yr arglwydd priodawr, a'r brenin, i vab y mab rhydd o gaeth vyned yn ansawdd, a gwasanaeth, a braint un o'r celvyddydu breiniolion, a bod gyda hyny priodasau yn deilyngion, nis gellir caeth ar un o'r epil wedi hyny. Ac val hyn, sev yn nawdd a braint celvyddyd vreiniawl, y cyrch cenedl eillion oresgynaeth a braint Cymry cynnwynawl ar y trydygwr; sev iawn i gelvyddyd ei braint a'i thrwydded o bumerwi rhyddion yn wahanred a braint ach a bonedd o waed cynnwynawl. A gradd a ennillawr o gelvyddyd vreiniawl ni syrther o heni, ac ni ddygwydd hi oddiar y genedl.

mutual justice for a country and kindred and their faithful people; since mutual dwelling and tranquil civilization cannot exist without commendable arts and sciences; and these cannot acquire stability without the privilege of free descent for such as shall practise them. On that account, it is the decision of law and society, that art should not be obstructed, nor forbidden, nor divested of privilege, nor likewise whoever shall practise it.

70. There are three free from the bond: to wit, a bard; a metallurgist; and a scholar: being aillts. For although the father may be bond, and an aillt, or a tacog, the son is free that assumes the character, and exercise, and privilege by function, of one or other of the three privileged arts; and is free whilst he shall live: and he has the right, under the privilege of his art, to his five free erws; for he is not to be either bond, or unprivileged, who shall know and can practise an art that is authoritative in respect to sciences. Nevertheless, although these kind of men attached to art may be free, their sons are to be bondmen and aillts; and they are called the three bond from the free; and they are aillts, until they attain the degree of seisor as to kin and free descent, and thenceforth the privilege of an innate Cymro. Nevertheless, the wise men say, that a permanent degree ought to be conferred upon privileged art; on that account, it is adjudged that the progeny approaches nearer to the degree of seisor by obtaining the privilege pertaining to art; and as the privilege of seisor is only to be attained in the fourth person, through kin and progeny and marriages, it is accomplished in the third person, under the privilege of art; because that every service in privileged art brings its degree nearer to innate seisin, than if it were without it; for privileged art has a right to its degree, in the progress of descent to seisin. And it is said, if the proprietary lord, and the king, permit a son of the free son of the bond to assume the character, practice, and privilege of any of the privileged arts, and likewise legitimate marriages occur, not one of the progeny can be bond afterwards. And in this manner, under the protection and privilege of privileged art, a kindred of aillts attains the seisin and privilege of innate Cymry in the third person; for art has a right to its privilege and its fruition of five free erws, distinct from the privilege of kin and descent from innate blood. And a degree gained through privileged art is not to become extinct, neither will it lapse from the kindred.

LXXI. Tair cangen celvyddydd barddoniaeth. Cyntav, privarodd, neu vardd trwyddedawg o vrait, ac iddo ei radd a'i vrait, o drovedigaeth, gan athraw gwarantedig a vardd gorseddawg; ac arno y mae pob cov celvyddydd a gwybodau, hyd y bont yn ei swydd ev, o vardd gwarantedig o radd a braint; a hevyd pob cov a chadw gwlad a chenedl, ar briodasau, ac achau, ac arvau, a rhandirodd, a breiniau gwlad a chenedl y Cymry. Ail, ovydd, a'i radd iddo yn mraint awen a gwybodau moliannus, a ddangoso yn warantedig, ac ydd atepo am danynt yn brawvedig ger bron gorsedd beirdd ddevodawl a theilwng; neu, lle na bo hono, eisteddvod gyvreithawl warantedig, a rodd cenedlad arglwydd y cyvoeth, neu ddeuddeg o'i ynghaid llys ev, neu ddeuddeg brawdwr llys yn y bo devodawl hyny; ac nis govynner trovedigaeth arno, nac amgen yn hawl na gwybodau gwarantedig. A hyn er cyvnaudd gwybodau, rhag nas cefid athrawon devodolion, ac o hyny myned gwybodau a chelvyddydd cov a doethineb ar gyvargoll, o ddifyg athrawon a throvedigion dosparthus. Ac eisioes er gwellau a mwyau gwybodau celvyddydd, o ddodi pob newydd arnadynt, wrth varn athrawon a doethion, ac o hyny eu cadarnau a'u breiniau yn warantedig, a hevyd rhag cau yn erbyn gwybodau doethineb, a ddelawr o syrth anianawl awen ac athrylith reddvawl. Trydydd, derwyddvardd, a hwnw a vydd o vardd gorseddog, graddedig a gwarantedig o ddoethineb a gwybodau, ac o davawd i ddangaws barn a phwyll ar wybodau; a'i swydd a vydd yn mraint rhodd o bwyll a chenedlad gorsedd ddevodawl, yn warantedig o raith gorsedd gan goelbren. A'i swydd dodi addysg, a dangaws gwybodau doethineb a dwyvoldeb yn gorsedd beirdd, ac yn llys, ac yn llan, ac yn y teulu y bytho ynnod ei swydd yn drwyddedawg. Ac iawn a chyvraith i bob un o'r tri hyn ei bumerwi rhyddion, yn mraint ei swydd celvyddydd, yn wahanredawl rhag a ddylit iddo yn amgen yn mraint Cymro cynnwynawl: sev ni ddifydd braint gynnwynawl un celvyddydd; nac un celvyddydd y gynnwynawl.

71. Three branches of the art of bardism. First, the primitive bard, or a bard licensed by privilege, having his degree and his privilege, by discipleship, from an authorized teacher who is a presiding bard; and upon him depends every memorial of art and sciences, so far as they may be in his department, as being an authorized bard of degree and privilege; and, likewise, every memorial and record of country and kindred, in respect to marriages, and kins, and arms, and territorial divisions, and the privileges of the country and kindred of the Cymry. Second, the ovate, having his degree under the privilege of genius and commendable sciences, which he shall exhibit authenticated, and for which he shall be able approvedly to answer before a customary and legitimate session of bards; or, where that shall not be, before a lawful and authorized congress, under the patronage of the lord of the territory, or twelve of his judges of court, or of twelve justices of court where that is customary; and discipleship shall not be required in respect to him, nor other claim than as to authorized sciences. And this is for the purpose of protecting sciences, lest there should not be found customary teachers, and consequently that the sciences and art of record and wisdom should pass into oblivion, from a deficiency of systematic teachers and disciples. And, likewise, for the purpose of improving and increasing the sciences of art, by adding every thing new to them, by the judgment of teachers and wise men, and thence to establish and give them authorized privilege, and also against precluding sciences of wisdom, which might spring from the natural burst of genius and intuitive invention. Third, the druid bard, who is to be a presiding bard, graduated and warranted as to wisdom and sciences, and of elocution to demonstrate judgment and reason in respect to sciences; and his function is to be under the privilege of a grant by the discretion and induction of a customary session, authenticated by the vote of session by ballot. And his function is to diffuse instruction, and to demonstrate the sciences of wisdom and religion in the session of the bards, and in court, and in church, and in the household wherein his office is performed. And it is right and law for each of these three to have his five free erws, under the privilege of the function of his art, distinct from what is due to him otherwise by the privilege of an innate Cymro: for innate privilege extinguishes no art; nor any art innate privilege.

LXXII. Tair cangen llenoriaeth y sydd: nid amgen, tavodawg cyvraith, sev hyny a vytho yn davodawg y rhwng Cymro ac alltud anghyviaith; a vetro arwyddaw arvau, a gweithredoedd moliannus, a dichweiniau rhyveddolion, yn a'u dealler gan a'u gwelont; ac ev a elwir y rhyw un a hwnw, arwyddvardd; ac, yn drydydd, a vetro ar lyvr a llythyr, ac ysgrivenu a darllen y Gymraeg yn gyviawn, a doddi addysg ar hyny, a chadw cov llythyr ar dri chov beirdd ynys Prydain: sev ydynt, achau bonedd o briodasau; a rhandiroedd; a gweithredoedd a gwybodau moliannus. A braint i bob un o'r tri hyn ei bumerwi rhyddion yn mraint a nawdd ei gelvyddydd, yn amgen noc a gafo yn mraint Cymro cynnwynawl; ac eve a vydd yn wr llys gwlad ac arglwydd, ac yn ewyllys y llys, a'i hyngraid, a'i brawdwy, yn nyddiau llys a gorsedd, gan ddosparth cyvraith; ac, am addysg a ddotawr, iawn yw trwydded a rhoddion yn mraint ammod yn wahan-redawl.

LXXIII. Tair cangen ferylltaeth y sydd o brivgeinciau: nid amgen, gov; maensaer; a phrensaer. Neu, o vodd arall, govaniaeth; saerniaeth coed; a saerniaeth ceryg; a gogymmraint y tri: ac iawn i bob un a wasanaetho un o'r tair celvyddydd hyn ei drwydded cyvarwys o bumerwi rhyddion, yn amgen noc a ddylit iddo yn mraint Cymro cynnwynawl; a bod yn ngwyllys yr arglwydd cyvoeth i ddodi addysg ar eillion y brenin, neu yr arglwydd, ac ar a vynawr o'i daiogion, dan dervynau cyvraith; sev yn nawdd nas dodder gradd celvyddydd ar nebawr o naddynt, namyn drwy genad yr arglwydd priodawr a'r brenin.

LXXIV. Tri rhyw y sydd ar gelvyddyddau cynnwynawl cenedl y Cymry: celvyddyddau doethineb, ac ar veirdd gorseddogion y cov a'r cadw, a'r addysg gan athrawon gwarantedig o swydd wrth gelvyddydd barddoniaeth; celvyddyddau ferylltaeth, ac ar ferylltiaid y cadw, a'r addysg gan athrawon gwarantedig o swydd; a chelvyddyddau teuluaid, ac ar y pencenedloedd lluniaethu, a gyru addysg gan benteuloedd dan dervynau cenedl hyd y nawved ach a gradd carennydd.

72. There are three branches of literature: to wit, a law advocate, who shall be an advocate between a Cymro and an alltud ignorant of the language; one who can symbolize arms, commendable actions, and extraordinary events, so as to be understood by such as observe them; and such a person is called a symbol bard; and, thirdly, one who is informed in book and letter, and in correctly writing and reading the "Cymraeg," and in imparting instruction thereupon, and in preserving a literary record in respect to the three records of the bards of the isle of Britain: and these are, the genealogy of descent by marriages; territorial divisions; and praiseworthy actions and sciences. And each one of these three has the privilege of his five free erws under the privilege and protection of his art, independently of what he shall obtain by the privilege of an innate Cymro; and he is a man of court of country and lord, and to be at the will of the court, and its judges, and its justices, during the days of the court and session, according to the regulation of law; and, for the instruction he shall impart, maintenance and gifts are due separately according to agreement.

73. There are three branches of mechanic arts, being primary branches: to wit, of a smith; of a stonemason; and of a carpenter. Or, otherwise, smithcraft; carpentry; and stonemasonry; and the three are coequal in privilege: and every one that shall practise one of these three arts has a right to his maintenance donation of five free erws, other than is due to him by the privilege of an innate Cymro; and he is to be at the will of the territorial lord to give instruction to the aillts of the king, or of the lord, and to any that should be thought proper of his taeogs, within the limits of the law; that is, in confidence that no degree of art be conferred upon any of them, except with the permission of the proprietary lord and the king.

74. There are three kinds of innate arts of the kindred of the Cymry: the arts of wisdom, and with the presiding bards rest their memorial and record, and instruction in them by authorized teachers from office attached to the art of bardism; the mechanical arts, and with the mechanics rest their record, and instruction in them by authorized teachers from office; and domestic arts, and with the chiefs of kindreds rest their regulations, and to enforce instruction by chiefs of households within the limits of the kindred unto the ninth descent and degree of affinity.

* Welsh language.

LXXV. Tair celvyddydd deuluaidd o briveinciau y sydd: llavuriaeth, sev aru tir; maeronaeth; a gweyddiaeth: ac ar y pencenedloedd gyru addysg arnynt; ac ateb o hyny yn llys, ac yn llan, ac yn mhob cyrch golychwyd.

LXXVI. Tair celvyddydd llys y sydd: yngneidiaeth; cyvarwyddydd ar ddosparthau a threvnau gwlad a chyvraith, a chov cadwedig arnynt; a chenadwriaeth gorwlad.

LXXVII. Tair celvyddydd ddinesig y sydd: meddyginiath; cyvnewidiaeth; a llongwriaeth: a braint dinas wahanredawl i bob un o henynt. Sev y bydd braint dinas o rodd cenedlad arglwydd y cyvoeth, yn warantedig o yngneidiaeth, ac yn wahanred rhag breiniau cyfredinion gwlad a chenedl, er cyvnewydd cyvnewidiaethau dosparthus, yn mraint cyviawnder.

LXXVIII. Tair braint gyfredin dinasoedd: nas gyrrer swydd ar a'u cyvanneddont, amgen noc a ddylit arnynt yn mraint a than dervynau eu dinasdrevydd; nawdd, nas gormeser ac nas argywedder alltudion anghyviaith a gyrchont y dinasoedd er cyvnewidiau; ac nas dylit marchnadoedd breinolion, namyn yn y dinasdrevydd teilyngion.

LXXIX. Tair celvyddydd voneddig y sydd: arvau; marchogaeth; a helwriaeth: ac nid rhydd namyn i Gymro cynnwynawl un o'r rhai hyny.

LXXX. Tair priv vraint pob Cymro cynnwynawl: goresgynaeth ar bumerwi rhyddion yn nhrwydded; braint cyfraw rhaith gwlad, yn nawdd ac yn mraint ei benenedl; a braint clud cywlad, sev yw hyny ymsymud i'r man y myno yn nghywlad, heb goll braint, a brawd, oni bydd swydd gwlad a llys arno, a lle bo, deddv arno ei gwasanaethu, ac nas dylit ei hebgor yn ngwlad.

LXXXI. Tri pheth y dylai pob Cymro tiriawg eu cadw a'u cynnal: gwraig briawd; gwr arvawg, lle nas dyco arv ei hunan; ac athraw teuluaidd.

LXXXII. Tri pheth nid iawn y naill heb y lleill o honynt: glyw; glew; a gwlad: sev o'r tri y bydd nawdd, nerth, a meddiant, yn ddosparthus a chadarn.

LXXXIII. Tri chyvarwys Cymro cynnwynawl: pumerwi rhyddion; cyvar gobaith; a helwriaeth.

75. There are three domestic arts, being primary branches: husbandry, or cultivation of land; pastoral cares; and weaving: and the chiefs of kindreds are to enforce instruction in them; and to answer in that respect in court, and in village, and in every assembly for worship.

76. There are three arts of a court: judicature; information upon the systems and regulations of a country and law, with a recorded memorial of them; and embassy to a border country.

77. There are three civic arts: medicine; commerce; and navigation: and with a peculiar corporate privilege to each of them. A corporated privilege is by the grant and creation of the lord of the territory, authenticated by the judicature, and distinct from the general privileges of a country and kindred, for the mutual protection of regular commercial affairs, under the privilege of equity.

78. Three common privileges of cities: that an office is not to be imposed upon such as inhabit them, other than is due from them, by the privilege and under the limits of their city corporations; protection, so that alltuds ignorant of the language, who repair to the cities for traffic, shall not be molested or injured; and that there ought not to be any privileged markets, but in the legitimate corporate cities.

79. There are three gentlemanly arts: arms; horsemanship; and hunting: and there is not any one of those free but to an innate Cymro.

80. Three primary privileges of every innate Cymro: seisin of five free erwes in fruition; the privilege of moving a raith of country, under the protection and under the privilege of his chief of kindred; and the privilege of a federate country mote, which is the removing himself to any where he may be minded within a federate country, without loss of privilege, or immunity, unless he be attached to an office of country and court, and where that shall be, he is bound to serve it, and he is not to be dispensed with in a country.

81. Three individuals whom it is the duty of every landed Cymro to keep and support: a married wife; an armed man, where he shall not bear arms himself; and a domestic teacher.

82. Three things where one is not meet without the others: a ruler; a hero; and a country: for from the three there will be protection, strength, and property, systematically and powerfully.

83. Three immunities of an innate Cymro: five free erwes; co-tillage of waste; and hunting.

LXXXIV. Tri chyfredinion cywlad a gorwlad: priv avon; priv fordd; a chyrch golychwyd: ac yn nawdd Duw a'i dangnev y byddant y rhai hyny; cyd nas noether arv gan a'u cyrchont yn erbyn a gyvarvyddont; ac a wnelo hyny, ai brodwr ai estron y bo, hawl galanas gan gwyn arno gan arglwydd y cyvoeth.

LXXXV. Tri breiniawl gorwlad: bardd; golychwydwr; a phencenedl: ac nis dylit braint cenad gorwlad namyn i un o'r tri hyn; ac nis dylit arv noeth yn erbyn un nac arall o'r tri hyn, ai yn rhyvel ai yn heddwch y byddai gwledydd a chenedloedd y breiniolion hyny; canys heb vrait a nawdd ar ddoethineb a dwyvoldeb a gwybodau gwladawl, nis gellir tangnevu cenedloedd yn rhyvel; achaws hyny, anhebgor gwlad a gorwlad yw, nawdd a braint i genadon gorwlad ymgyrch yn heddwch a diogelwch, cyd y bont warantedig o swydd, herwydd devodau cynghrair.

LXXXVI. Tri chyfredinion gwlad: cammawn; dadlau; a golychwyd: canys gwys a saiv ar bawb iddynt o Gymry cynnwynawl; sev a'u gelwir y tri chyrch cyfredin.

LXXXVII. Tri chyvanneddrwydd gwlad: plant bychain; cwn; a cheiliogau: a lle a'u cafer y tri hyn, iawn yw i'r lle hyny vrait llys a llan; ac a hyny holl vreiniau gwlad gyvannedd.

LXXXVIII. Tri anhebgor cenedl: ei phencenedl; ei dialwr; a'i theisbantyle. Pencenedl a vydd hynav o wr cyvallwy yn y genedl hyd y nawved ach; a'i vrait a'i swydd yw cyfraw gwlad a llys yn rhaid ei wr; a thavodawg ei genedl yw ev yn rhaid ddygynnull gwlad a chywlad, a deddv ar bob gwr o'r genedl ei wrandaw ev, ac iddo ev wrandaw ei wr. Dialwr cenedl a'i dwg yn nghad a rhyvel, yn y bo achaws; ac a ymlid ddrygweithredwyr, ac a'u dwg ger bron llys, ac a'u cysp, wrth varn llys a brawd gwlad. Teisbantyle, sev yw hwnw gwr cyvrwng, yn llys, ac yn llan, ac yn nghammawn, ac yn mhob pellenigaeth; ev a vydd o ddoethion y genedl gan raith penteuluoedd y genedl, ac yn gydgyvarail a'r pencenedl yn mhob rhaid a dygynnull gwlad; a' ivreiniaw gan raith ei genedl hyd nawved ach y gan goelbren, sev hyny, rhaid avlavar.

84. Three common rights of federate country and border country: a principal river; a high road; and a resort of worship: and those are under the protection of God and his peace; since a weapon is not to be unsheathed by such as frequent them against those they may meet; and whoever shall do so, whether a native or a stranger, a claim of galanas against him arises on the plaint of the lord of the territory.

85. Three privileged persons of a border country: a bard; a religious worshipper; and a chief of kindred: and the privilege of a border country embassy is vested only in one of these three; and a weapon is not to be bared against one or other of these three, whether at war or at peace the countries and kindreds of those privileged ones may be; for, without privilege and protection to wisdom and piety and political sciences, kindreds at war could not be tranquillized; on that account, it is indispensable to a country and border country, that there should be protection and privilege for border country missionaries to have ingress in peace and security, they being authorized by office, according to the customs of truce.

86. Three common resorts of a country: combat; pleadings; and worship: for a summons is in force to all who are innate Cymry; hence they are called the three common assemblies.

87. Three signs of the inhabited state of a country: little children; dogs; and cocks: and where these three are found, such a place is entitled to the privilege of a court and church; and thence all the privileges of an inhabited country.

88. Three indispensables of a kindred: its chief of kindred; its avenger; and its representative. A chief of kindred is to be the oldest efficient man in the kindred to the ninth descent; and his privilege and office are to move the country and court in behalf of his man; and he is the speaker of his kindred in the conventional raith of country and federate country, and it is the duty of every man of the kindred to listen to him, and for him to listen to his man. The avenger of a kindred leads it to battle and war, as there may be occasion; and he pursues evildoers, brings them before the court, and punishes them, according to the sentence of the court and judgment of the country. The representative is the mediating man, in court, and in congregation, and in combat, and in every foreign affair; he is to be one of the wise men of the kindred by raith of chiefs of households in the kindred, and to be a coadjutor

LXXXIX. Tair cylavan a bair i vab un a'i gwnelo golli ei drev tad, a syrthiaw i radd ac anmraint alltud hyd yn mhen y nawved ach, neu gyrchu ar ei bedwerygwr gradd goresgynydd, o briodasau teilyngion: lladd ei bencenedl; lladd ei arglwydd; a lladd ei deisbantyle: rhag trymed y galanasau hyny.

xc. O dri pheth y cyll Cymro vraint ei wlad a'i genedl: cwbl gargychwyn i wlad estron; cwbl gyvymdanc ag estron a vo yn rhyvel a chenedl y Cymry; a chwbl ymrodd i lu gortrech gorwlad ar genedl y Cymry: sev yw hyny brad gwlad ac arglwydd.

xc.1. O dri pheth ydd ennill Cymro vraint ei wlad a'i genedl a golles eve: cwbl garddychwel o wlad estron, dan ddamdwng a gwystlon hyd yn ngradd goresgynydd, ac yna difydd gwystleidiaeth; cwbl gargoll dros Gymry a Chymro, lle bytho yn ngwlad estron; a chwbl ymwrthladd a llu gortrech, lle gallesid iddo ddawn a braint o lwyr a chwbl ymgyvladd ag wynt.

xcii. Tair hawl goresgyn gyfredin ar dir y sydd: hawl etivedd gwarantedig o gov a chadw llys a llen yn warrantedig; hawl mab aillt ar ei bedwerygwr cynnwynawl; a hawl prid cyvreithawl, gan varn llys ac ynad, i wr damdwng y brenin, neu i Gymro cynnwynawl.

xciii. Tair hawl goresgyn wahanredawl y sydd ar dir: hawl etivedd cyvreithawl yn attychwel o wlad estron, neu alltudedd, lle a'i barnwyd yn ngholl gan varwolaeth, a chael o arall ei dir, o varn llys a brawd; a hawl gwrthriviad, sev hwnw etivedd cysevin a wrthbrito dir ei genedl, a brided dan gov a chadw a chlyw gwlad, lle dangoso ei vonedd yn warrantedig, a doddi y gwrthbrid yn llaw ynad y llys y bo ynddi yr hawl a'r ddadl; ac o hyny cyvraith a ddywed, iawn iddo ei dir, a'r ynad a ddyrydd, dros hyny, y gwrthbrid i ai dylai; a hawl mab aillt ar ei bedwerygwr cynnwynawl, sev yw hyny goresgynydd cyvraith o briodasau teilyngion, ac eve a ddylai dir trwydded yn rhydd ac yn mraint cymmrawd y gan yr arglwydd a vo brenin y tir, with the chief of kindred in every raith and convention of country; and he is to be elected by the raith of his kindred to the ninth descent by ballot, that is, by tacit vote.

89. Three crimes that cause the son of the perpetrator to lose his patrimony, and to fall into the state and degradation of an alltud to the end of the ninth descent, or, through his fourth man in progeny, to obtain the degree of seisor, by legitimate marriages: the killing of his chief of kindred; killing of his lord; and the killing of his representative: because of the heinousness of those crimes.

90. By three things a Cymro loses the privilege of his country and kindred: entire car-removal to a strange country; entirely confederating with strangers who shall be at war with the Cymry kindred; and entirely resigning himself to the prevailing host of a border country against the kindred of the Cymry: and which constitute treason to country and lord.

91. By three things a Cymro regains the privilege of his country and kindred lost by him: entire car-returning from a strange country, under stipulation and pledges to the degree of seisor, and then pledging becomes extinct; entire car-loss in behalf of the Cymry and a Cymro, where he shall be in a strange country; and entirely opposing himself to a prevailing host, where he might have acquired reward and privilege by fully and entirely combining with them.

92. There are three common claims to seisin of land: a claim of heirship substantiated by memorial and record of court and clergy; a claim of an aillt through his fourth man of innate progeny; and a claim of lawful prid, by the decision of court and judge, to a fealty man of the king, or to an innate Cymro.

93. There are three special claims for seisin of land: the claim of a lawful heir returning from a strange country, or an alltud state, where he had been supposed lost by death, and another having obtained his land, by the decision of a court and judgment; and the claim of a counter-party, that is, an original heir who shall counter-purchase the land of his kindred, sold in the memory and record and hearing of the country, where he shall show his descent authenticated, and deposit the counter-prid in the hand of the judge of the court wherein the claim and cause shall be; and, on that account, the law says, that he has a right to his land, and the judge shall deliver, on that consideration, the counter-prid to whom it shall belong;

Tair dadl am dir a ddylit eu barnu gan wlad yn rhaith tri channyn, lle a'u gwrthrymer: dadl mab aillt, ar ei bedwerygwr o briodasau cynnwynolion, yn hawl ei bumerwi rhyddion; dadl carddychwel o wlad estron, yn dangaws dau dyst yn warantedig ei bentanvaen, neu ei esgynvaen, neu ei vaen tervyn; a hyny yn warantedig o gov, a chadw, a chlyw gwlad, a gwybyddiaid coeladwy; a dadl gwrthriviaid, sev yw gwrthriviad, etivedd cysevin a ddoto yn llaw ynad, neu ger bron llys brawd a chyvraith, y gwrthbrid i a brynes dir ei genedl dan gov gwarantedig, sev oes gwrthriviad a vydd gan a bryno dir ar y goresgyn, a hyny a vydd yn y delo y gwrthriviad, yn warantedig o etiveddiaeth, a doddi cyviawn wrthbrid i a ddalio y tir, ar y pentanvaen, neu ar esgynvaen, neu ar vaen tervyn y tir, neu ar y maen gwyn nesav a geir i'r lle, neu yn llawy nad llys y cwmwd, neu ar glawr ger bron y llys; a lle gwnelo hyny, gwlad a ddywed y dylit iddo ei dir, ac i'r gwrthrym y gwrthbrid.

xcv. Tair dadl y dylit eu barnu gan ddedryd a rhaith gwlad, yn erbyn haerllydrwydd: dadl am wystleidiaeth, lle ydd ymwystler a'r brenin; dadl y bo ymddifyn, neu wad am dir ynddi; a dadl o wrthrym brenin yn erbyn cyvraith: a'r cyfraw ar bencenedl gwr a ddyco yr hawl, yn llys, ac yn llan, ac ar osteg a rhybudd cyvreithawl undydd a blwyddyn.

xcvi. Tri chyveiliorn cyvraith y sydd: hawl anhysbys; ateb anghwbl; a chov anghyttyst.

xcvii. Tri gwared y sydd rhag y tri chyveiliorn: cadw a chynnal cov dosparthus ar ach a bonedd gan briodasau teilyngion, ac ar randiroedd a'u perthynasau; ac ateb cwbl, a chan dyst gwarantedig, a chan a and the claim of an aillt through his fourth man of innate progeny, that is, a seisor by law and legitimate marriages, and who is entitled to land of maintenance freely and under the privilege of consociation from the lord who shall be sovereign of the land, and the court shall adjudge, and shall grant it to him, under limitations.

94. Three suits concerning land that ought to be decided by a country in a raith of three hundred persons, where the parties are oppressed: the suit of an aillt, through his fourth man of progeny by innate marriages, in claim of his five free erws; the suit of a car-returning person from a strange country, producing two authentic witnesses of his fire-back stone, or his mounting stone, or his meer stone; and that authenticated from the memory, and record, and hearing of the country, and credible evidences; and the suit of a counter-party, a counter-party being an original heir, who shall deposit in the hand of the judge, or in the presence of a court of judgment and law, the counter-brid for him who purchased the land of his kindred under authentic record, that is, the term of the counter-party to the seisin shall rest with him who shall purchase land, and that until the counter-party, established as to heirship, shall come and deposit a legal counter-brid for him who shall hold the land, upon the fire-back stone, or upon the mounting stone, or upon the meer stone of the land, or upon the nearest white stone that shall be found to the place, or in the hand of the judge of the court of the cymwd, or down in the presence of the court; and where he shall do so, the country declares that he is entitled to his land, and the counter-holder to the counter-brid.

95. Three suits to be decided by verdict and raith of country, against arrogance: a suit as to pledging, where there shall be pledging with the king; a suit wherein there shall be a defence, or a denial concerning land; and a suit as to the opposing power of the king against law: and the agitation to lie with the chief of kindred of the man who shall prefer the suit, in court, and in congregation, and upon lawful proclamation and notice of a year and a day.

96. There are three errors of law: an uncertain claim; an imperfect answer; and an unsupported record.

97. There are three means of relief from the three errors: keeping and maintaining a systematic record of kin and descent by legitimate marriages, and of territorial divisions and their appurtenances; a full answer, gatwawr y cov yn warrantedig, ai o vyw ai n varw y bo; a rhaith gwlad, gan gyfraw pencenedl y neb a ddyco yr hawl yn llys: sev achaws anhysbysder hawl y dosparthwyd ac y cadarnawyd ar veirdd, gwarantedig o vrait a gradd gorsedd, yn wahanredawl y cadw ar ach a bonedd, ac ar randiroedd; ac, wrth hyny, cov meini pentan, a thervynvain, ac esgynvain, ac am a'u symutai yn anghyvarch llys ac yngnauid.

xcviii. Tri anghydwbybod cyvraith: tervynu yn gwbl cyn ymovyn yn drychwil am wirionedd; barnu ar draws anian a syrth anesgorawl dichweiniau ac amaerau; a chymhell dyn er ei avles, lle na bo na chyvraith na chyviawn yn gyvlavar a'r varn a gymhellawr.

xcix. Tri pheth a gadwant gov tir a thyle, ac a savant yn mraint tystadon: pentanvaen; meini o dyn; ac esgynvaen: canys nod y genedl a vydd ernynt; a hawl lledrad vydd ar a'u symuto, heb genad arglwydd y cyvoeth, gan varn llys a chyvraith; achaws tystion cedeirn ydynt; ac eneidvaddeu pob un a ddinystro dystiol-aeth gadarn.

c. Tri maen arall y sydd, a hawl lledrad ar a'u symuto: maen tervyn; maen gwyn gorsedd; a maen gobaith: ac eneidvaddeu a wnelo hyny.

ci. Tri pheth ni ddylit heb genad arglwydd a'i lys: adeilad yn ngobaith; aredig yn ngobaith; a digoediaw tir gwyllt yn ngobaith: a hawl lledrad ar a'u gwnelo; canys gwlad a chenedl yn gyfredin bicufynt pob gwyllt a gobaith; ac nid iawn meddiant wahanred i nebun ar vawr na bychan o'r cyvryw diroedd.

cii. Tri pheth rhydd i bob dyn, ai brodawr ai estron y bo, ac nid iawn, herwydd cyvraith, eu hattal: dwr o fynnon, neu o nant, neu avon; tanwydd o geubren; a maen na vo yn ngwaith.

ciii. Tri pheth ni ddylit eu dwyn i wlad estron, heb genad gwlad ac arglwydd: aur; llyvrau; a gwenith.

and with sufficient witness, and by such as keep the record under authority, whether of the living or of the dead; and raith of country, upon the agitation of the chief of kindred of such as shall bring the claim into court: it was on account of the uncertainty of claims that it has been regulated and established for bards, qualified by the privilege and degree of session, specially to have the custody of kin and descent, and of territorial divisions; and, in addition to that, the memorial of fire-back stones, and meer stones, and mounting stones, and rules as to those who should remove them without the authority of the court and judges.

98. Three unconscionables of law: to determine fully before scrupulously enquiring concerning the truth; to decide against nature and the inevitable consequence of circumstances and times; and to urge a person to his disadvantage, where neither law nor equity shall be consonant with the judgment proposed.

99. Three things that preserve a memorial of land and homestead, and that stand in the quality of witnesses: a fire-back stone; the stones of a kiln; and a mounting stone: because the mark of the kindred remains upon them; and an action for theft will lie against those who shall remove them, without the permission of the lord of the territory, under the judgment of the court and the law; because they are strong testimonies; and forfeiture of life attaches to every one that shall destroy a strong testimony.

100. There are three other stones, for which an action for theft lies against such as shall remove them: a meer stone; a white stone of session; and a guide stone: and his life is forfeited who shall do so.

101. Three things that are not to be done without the permission of the lord and his court: building on a waste; ploughing a waste; and clearing wild land of wood on a waste: and there shall be an action for theft against such as shall do so; because every wild and waste belongs to the country and kindred in common; and no one has a right to exclusive possession of much or little of land of that kind.

102. Three things free to every person, whether he be a native or a stranger, and it is not right, according to law, to debar them therefrom: water from a spring, or brook, or river; fuel from a decayed tree; and a stone that shall not be in work.

103. Three things that are not to be conveyed to a foreign country, without the permission of the country and the lord: gold; books; and wheat.

civ. Tri pheth nis dyly mab aillt eu gwerthu, heb genad ei arglwydd priodawr, rhag y prynai eue hwynt gantho : gwenith ; mel ; a meirch : a lle nas pryno ei arglwydd wynt, rhydd iddo eu gwerthu lle y myno, cyd nas gwertho i wlad estron.

cv. Tri dyn a dalant alanas, ac ni chant ran o alanas : gwraig ; ysgolaig ; a dyn ni thalo geiniog baladr.

cvi. Tri dyn y dylit eu cadw rhag arvau : caeth ; mab cyn pedwar ar ddeg oed ; ac ynvyd cyhoedd ar byst gwlad ac arglwydd.

cvi. Tri dyn nis dylit gyru arvau arnynt : bardd gorseddawg ; ysgolaig llys a llan ; ac ynad : gan nas gellir eu hebgor yn eu hawsawdd a'u swyddau, ac am nas dylit arv yn llaw a vytho, yn mraint Duw a'i dangnev, gan gelvyddyd a gwybodau dwyvolion, a chan swydd yn rhaid gwlad a chenedl.

cvi. Tri dyn a gadwant vraint llys ar y ty neu y lle bynag y bwynt, yn ngwrthwydd y brenin neu arglwydd y llys : ynad llys ; golychwydwr llys ; a rhaglaw : sev bynag o van neu dy y bwynt y tri ynghyd, braint llys ar y lle hyny, cyd na bai cytrych y brenin.

cix. Tri dyn nid a cyvraith arnynt : meddw ; llai na phedwar ar ddeg oed ; ac a gymhellawr o'i anvodd i wneuthur anghyvrith.

cx. Tri dyn ni ellir canlyn cwynau ernynt yn unig ac yn odidogion : gwraig heb ei gwr ; mab dioedran heb ei dad ; a mab aillt heb ei arglwydd priodawr.

cx. Tri dyn nid gair eu gair ar ddim yn y byd : golychwydwr gwedi y toro ei gynghrair ; tyst a gavwyd yn anudon a ddywed yn llys, neu yn arall o van, ar grair ; a lleidr cynnevodig cyhoeddgwbl.

cxii. Tri dyn nid oes saraad iddynt : clavr ; ynvyd cynnwynawl ; ac alltud na vytho yn wr priawd Cymraes gynnwynawl : sev eisioes y bydd gwerth cyvraith ar bob un onaddynt, a dirwyawg a wnelo gam ag wynt, ac a'u drygont yn nghorf a meddiant.

cxiii. Tri enw rhybuddiwr gwlad : garwgychwedl ; gwaedd gwlad ; a rhingyll : a

104. Three things that an aillt is not to sell, without the permission of his proprietary lord, lest he should want to buy them of him : wheat ; honey ; and horses : and where his lord shall not buy them of him, he is at liberty to sell them wherever he willeth, so that he do not sell them to a foreign country.

105. Three persons who are to pay galanas, and who are not to have a share of galanas : a woman ; a scholar ; and a person who does not pay a spear penny.

106. Three persons who are to be kept from having arms : a bondman ; a boy under the age of fourteen ; and a public idiot upon the posts of the country and the lord.

107. Three persons who are not to be compelled to bear arms : a presiding bard ; a scholar of the court and church ; and a judge : since they cannot be dispensed with in respect to their character and functions, and because there ought not to be a weapon in the hand of such as shall be, under the privilege of God and his peace, attached to pious art and sciences, and to office necessary for a country and kindred.

108. Three persons who preserve the privilege of a court at whatever house or place they may be, in the absence of the king or lord of the court : the judge of the court ; the priest of the court ; and the steward : for at whatsoever place or house the three shall be together, the privilege of a court is attached to that place, although the king may not be present.

109. Three persons not amenable to law : the inebriated ; one under the age of fourteen ; and one compelled against his will to commit a breach of law.

110. Three persons against whom complaints cannot be prosecuted singly and distinctively : a wife without her husband ; a son under age without his father ; and an aillt without his proprietary lord.

111. Three persons whose word is not to be credited in any case : a religious professor after he shall have broken his vow ; a witness who has been detected in perjury in what he has spoken in court, or elsewhere, on the relic ; and a notoriously habitual thief.

112. Three persons to whom saraad is not due : a leper ; a natural fool ; and an alltud who is not married to an innate Cymraes : and nevertheless there is worth in law attached to each of them, and whoever shall ill-use them, and injure them in person and property, is subject to a dirwy.

113. Three names applied to the warning officer of the country : awful rumour ; cry rhydd i hwnw fordd a diarfordd, ddydd a nos, ba le bynag ydd clo yn ei swydd, cyd y bo yn ei law ei gorn dan nod arglwydd y cyvoeth.

cxv. Tri rhyw wr y sydd : alltud cynnwynawl, sev hwnw estron o gysevin hanvod, neu vab, neu wyr iddo, a phob un o vamau estronion ; mab aillt mamwysawl, sev a vo ei vam yn Gymraes gynnwynawl, ac cillion yn mraint mamwys a'u gelwir y cyvryw ; a brodorion, sev yw brodorion Cymry cynnwynawl, heb gaeth, heb alltud, heb ledach, yn y gwaed, ac ar y pedwerygwr y saiv braint brodawl, neu Gymro cynnwynawl ar aillt o vamwys cynnwynawl.

cxvi. Tair gwraig y dylai eu meibion vamwys herwydd cyvraith : mab gwraig a rother i alltud o vodd ei chenedl ; mab gwraig a wystler yn ngwlad anghyviaith, o beichioger hi yno, gan ei gwystlaw o'i chenedl a'i harglwydd ; a gwraig y dyco alltud drais erni : sev y dylit i veibion y gwragedd hyny drev eu mamau ; ac nis dylit ei oedi hyd y nawvedydd drev ei vam i un o'r meibion hyny.

cxvii. Tri cheidwadaeth tir y sydd : arglwydd a geidw y tir a ddisgyno iddo o varwolaeth perchenawg, ni adnaper ei etiveddion, hyd oni ddelo etivedd gwarantedig iddei ovyn ; a thir Cymro cynnwynawl a gollo ei dir a'i vraint hyd yn mhen y nawved ach ; a thir mab dioedran yn y delo i oedran goresgyn.

cxviii. Tri gwad cyswynblant : tad, os byw, ar ei lw ei hunan ; lle bo marw y tad, pencenedl, a seithlw cenedl, ganthio a'u cymer ac a'u gwad ; lle na bo pencenedl, llw dengwr a deugain o'r genedl a'u gwad : a chyswynvab a wedir mab aillt a chaeth a'i bernir hyd ei bedwerygwr, neu hyd oresgyn nawvedydd.

LAWS, II.

of country ; and ringyll : and road and no road are free to such a one, by day and by night, wherever he may have to go officially, whilst he shall have in his hand his horn bearing the mark of the lord of the territory.

114. There are three rests of arms, that they be not borne in hand or naked : one is, at a resort of worship, by the privilege of the bards of the isle of Britain, under the protection of God and his peace ; the second is, at a convention of a country, and at a court of a country and the lord ; thirdly, the weapon of a guest, in his lodging, under the protection of God and the king.

115. There are three kinds of men : an innate alltud, a stranger by primary origin, or a son, or a grandson to him, and the mothers of each being strangers ; an aillt by maternity, whose mother is an innate Cymraes, and such are called aillts under the privilege of maternity ; and natives, natives are innate Cymry, without bond, without alltud, without imperfect descent, in their blood, and the privilege of a native rests upon the fourth man of progeny, or innate Cymro from an aillt by innate maternity.

116. Three women whose sons are entitled to maternity according to law : the son of a woman who shall be given to an alltud by the consent of her kindred ; the son of a woman who shall be given as a pledge in a country of a different language, if she shall become pregnant there, since she was pledged by her kindred and her lord ; and a woman upon whom an alltud shall commit a rape : for the sons of those women are entitled to the inheritance of their mothers ; and the maternal inheritance is not to be delayed until the ninth to any of those three sons.

117. There are three conservancies of land : the lord has conservancy of the land that shall fall to him by the death of the owner, whose heirs are not known, until an acknowledged heir shall come to demand it ; and of the land of an innate Cymro who shall lose his land and his privilege unto the end of the ninth descent ; and of the land of a minor until he shall attain the age of seisin.

118. Three denials of reputed children : by a father, if living, upon his own oath ; where the father shall be dead, the chief of kindred, with the oaths of seven of the kindred, shall both receive and deny them ; where there is not a chief of kindred, the oaths of fifty men of the kindred shall deny them : and a reputed son who shall cxix. O dri pheth ni ellir gwadu mab o genedl: ei eni yn y gwely cyvreithawl, a'i vagu undydd a blwyddyn heb wad; rhoi gwerth er ei vagu, cyd bo mab llwyn a pherth; a'i gymeryd ar osteg: a gwedi un o'r tri hyn nis gall y tad ei wadu.

cxx. Tri chymeriad a vydd ar vab: un yw, ei dad, a'i lw ev ei hunan a'i gwad neu a'i cymer; ail yw, lle na bo byw y tad, pencenedl ar ei seithved o wyr twng o'r genedl a'i gwad ac a'i cymer; trydydd, oni bydd pencenedl, un gwr ar hugain o'r genedl a'i gwad ac a'i cymer; sev saith yn lle y tad, a saith yn lle y pencenedl, a saith gyd a'r pencenedl; ac nid rhaid tyngu drwy beredd a phervedd, namyn hyd eithav rhyn pwyll a chydwybod. A lle a'i cymerir, val hyn a'i gwncir: sev y pencenedl a'i cymer gerydd ei law ddehau a'i law ddehau, ac a'i rhydd yn llaw y gwr hynav o'r seithwyr; ac velly o hynav i hynav hyd yn mhen y seithved gwr; ac nid oes na nod na dinod ar y gwyr hyny, namyn eu bod yn henuriaid y genedl, ac nas dylnt ranu tir ag ev, ac yn ogydgerdded ag a'i cymerir ac a'i gwedir.

cxxi. Tair fordd y dialltuder dyn: tad ar ei lw ei hunan, lle bo y tad hwnw yn vrodawr o Gymro cynnwynawl; pencenedl ar ei seithwyr cyttwng; ac ar a ddywetont dengwr cenedl a deugain ar lw gan ryn pwyll a chywybod; ac yna brodorawg vydd.

cxxii. Tri llw gwared: llw pencenedl a'i saith henuriaid cynghenedl; llw henuriaid cynghenedl yn dri seithwyr; a llw gwlad yn ddengwr a deugaint: a lle nis gellir y cyntav, rhaid vydd yr ail, a lle na bo yr ail, yna y trydydd.

cxxiii. Tri phrawv dyn ar ei lw ei hunan: gwraig am drais gwr; hwrdd a chyrch anghyvarch ar ddyn; a thad yn gwadu, neu yn cymeryd, mab sev cyswynvab.

cxxiv. Tri etivedd y sydd: mab o briodas gynnwynawl; mab cyswyn a gymero be denied is adjudged to be an aillt and a bondman until his fourth man of progeny, or until seisin by the ninth.

119. In three cases a son cannot be denied by a kindred: his being born in the lawful bed, and nursed for a year and a day without denial; the giving consideration for his nursing, although he be a child of bush and brake; and his being acknowledged publicly: and after either of these three the father cannot deny him.

120. There are to be three receptions of a son: one is, by his father, and his own oath denies him or receives him; the second is, where the father shall not be living, the chief of kindred with six sworn men of the kindred deny him and receive him; thirdly, if there be no chief of kindred, twenty-one men of the kindred deny him and receive him; that is, seven instead of the father, seven instead of the chief of kindred, and seven along with the chief of kindred; and it is not necessary to swear directly to the fact, but to the utmost scope of reason and conscience. And in the case of his being received, it is to be done thus: the chief of kindred is to take him by his right hand with his right hand, and to deliver him into the hand of the oldest man of the seven men; and so from oldest to oldest unto the seventh man; and it is not necessary that they should be nod-men or not nod-men, but that they be elders of the kindred, and that they are not to share land with him, and unanimous in receiving or denying him.

121. Three ways of reversing the alltud state of a person: a father upon his own oath, where that father shall be an innate Cymro; the chief of kindred with six men all sworn; and upon what fifty men of the kindred shall declare upon oath according to the impulse of reason and conscience; and then he becomes established as a native.

122. Three oaths of deliverance: the oaths of the chief of kindred with his seven elders of the same kindred; the oaths of the elders of the same kindred consisting of thrice seven men; and the oath of the country by fifty men: and where the first cannot be had, the second becomes necessary, and where the second cannot be had, then the third.

123. Three proofs of a person by an individual oath: a woman of being violated by a man; a thrust and sudden attack upon a person unprepared; a father in denying, or in receiving, a son or a reputed son.

124. There are three kinds of heirs: a son by an innate marriage; a reputed son y tad ar ei lw er cael etivedd, sev ni saiv hawl a dadl ar vonedd cyswynvab a gymerawr ar lw tad; a mab o genedl, lle na bo na mab priodas, na chyswynvab.

cxxv. Tair merched ni thalant amobrau : merch brenin, neu arglwydd cyvoeth; merch edlin; a merch pencenedl.

cxxvi. Tair breninaeth y sydd : tywysawg hynav ei oresgyn, yn benteyrnedd; arglwydd cyvoeth gorseddawg, yn vrenin yn ei lys; a phencenedl, yn rheol a chyvnawdd ei genedl a'i geraint : a braint cyfraw gwlad i bob un o'r tri brenin hyny; sev yw cyfraw gwlad, lluniaethu rhaith, lle nis gellir iawn yn nghyvrraith yn amgen ■ vodd.

cxxvii. Tair pla cenedl : magu mab arglwydd; dwyn mab yn ngham i genedl; a gwarchadw penrhaith.

cxxviii. Tri saraad gwr : cyvlavan arno; bod gan ei wraig; a thori ei nawdd gwedi y rhotho.

cxxix. Tri saraad brenin : tori ei nawdd; cyrch cyvlavan yn ei wydd; a bod gan ei wraig.

cxxx. Tri gwasanaeth ysgolaig neu wr llen llys : cadw dadl ar lythyr yn y bo tervyn; dileu llythyr gwedi tervyn; a bod bob amser yn ei swydd wrth ewyllys arglwydd y llys a'i yngnaid.

cxxxI. Tri chysfredin cenedl : pencenedl; teisbantyle; a mab gwraig a rother o vodd cenedl i estron : sev y cafant bob un o'r tri eu trwydded o ereidr y genedl : sev i'r pencenedl yn mraint ei riawd; y teisbantyle yn mraint ei swydd a'i ansawdd; a'r mab yn mraint mamwys.

cxxxii. Tair aelwyd a ddyly wneuthur iawn tros na bo arglwyddoddev : tad; brawd hynav; a chwegrwn.

cxxxiii. Tair braint wahanredawl pencenedl : braint carchar; braint amddifynblaid i ateb gwrthrym; a braint nawdd mab aillt a gafer gan ei genedl, val nas cafo gam a thasg nas dylit o gyvrraith a chydwybod.

whom the father shall receive upon his oath to obtain an heir, and no claim and suit upon the descent of a reputed son received upon the oath of the father is to be entertained; and a youth of kindred, where there is neither a son by marriage, nor a reputed son.

125. Three daughters who do not pay amobyr : the daughter of a king, or lord of a territory; the daughter of an edling; and the daughter of a chief of kindred.

126. There are three kingships : a prince who is the oldest in seisin, as supreme ruler; the presiding lord of a territory, as king in his court; and a chief of kindred, as a guide and mutual protection among his kindred and relatives : and the privilege of agitating the country is attached to each of those three kings; agitating the country implies, the forming of a raith, where right in law cannot be accomplished in another way.

127. Three plagues of a kindred : nursing a son of a lord; affiliating of a son wrongfully to a kindred; and surveillance of the supreme raith.

128. Three saraads to a man : maltreating him; being connected with his wife; and breaking his protection after he has granted it.

129. Three saraads to a king : breaking his protection; assault in his presence; and being connected with his wife.

130. Three duties of a scholar or clerk of a court : committing a suit to writing until it be terminated; deleting the writing after the termination; and being at all times at the will of the lord of the court and his judges.

131. Three commonalties of a kindred : chief of kindred; representative; and the son of a woman who shall be given with consent of kindred to a stranger : for each of the three shall have their maintenance from the ploughs of the kindred : that is, to the chief of kindred under the privilege of his parentality; the representative under the privilege of his function and his character; and the son under the privilege of maternity.

132. Three hearths that are to make satisfaction on account of such as shall not be under fealty to the lord : that of a father; of an elder brother; and of a father-in-law.

133. Three peculiar privileges of a chief of kindred : the privilege of imprisonment; the privilege of a defendant party to answer an opposing power; and the privilege of protection to an aillt who shall be obtained by his kindred, so that he may not receive any wrong or task that ought not to be by law and conscience.

cxxxiv. Tri rhieni dyn: tad; hendar; a gorhendar.

cxxxv. Tri chydveddion gwr: brawd; cernderw; a chyverdderw.

cxxxvi. Tri dyn a vyddant eneidvaddeu, ac nis gellir eu prynu: bradwr gwlad a chenedl; a latho arall o fyrnicder; a lleidyr provedig am werth mwy no phedair bygant.

cxxxvii. Tri lleidyr ni vyddant eneidvaddeu: gwraig o gyddledrad a'i gwr; mab dioedran; a rheidus am ymborth lledrad, wedi cerdded o hano dair trev, a naw ty yn mhob trev, heb gael rhodd er ei govyn.

cxxxviii. Tri lleidyr camlwrw: lleidyr ci; lleidyr llysiaw gerddi; a lleidyr anivel gwyllt o dir dinllan.

cxxxix. Tri lledrad y sydd: cymeryd yn lledrad; attal yn lledrad; lladd da bywydawl yn lledrad: ac eneidvaddeu pob un o'r tri, ac nis gellir eu prynu.

cxl. Tri lledrad pryn y sydd: lledrad o dwyll; lledrad o gribddail; a lledrad o gudd dichweiniau: a'u prynu dros eu gwerth cyvreithiawl dair gwaith.

cxli. Tri phriodolder y sydd ar bob dyn: etiveddiaeth; braint; a rhyw: etiveddiaeth a vydd herwydd braint; a braint herwydd rhyw; rhyw, val-y mae benyw a gwryw, brodawr ac aillt, a hen ac ieuanc.

cxlii. Tri rhydd cenedl, a'i heillion yn mraint mamwys: coed adeilad o goed gwyllt; helwriaeth yn nhir gwyllt; a mesori tir gwyllt.

cxliii. Tri phriv davadogion llys: arglwydd; brawdwr; a mach.

cxliv. Tri attavodogion llys: plaid; tyst; a gwaedd gwlad.

cxlv. Tri thawedogion llys: arglwydd yn gwrandaw ar yngnaid a brawdwr; yngnaid a brawdwr yn gwrandaw hawlwr ac amddifynwr; a phawb naddynt yn gwrandaw tystiadon hyd yn y tawont eu hunain: sev cyvraith a ddywed, ni ddylit yru taw ar dyst, rhag difawdd y gwirionedd.

cxlvi. Tri chanol cyvraith: arglwydd, i gadarnau cyviawnder; mach, neu wystl, i gadw cywirdeb; ac yngnad, neu vrawdwr cyviawn, i amlycau gwirionedd.

cxlvii. Tri dyn a ddinystriant wlad a chenedl: arglwydd twyllgar; ynad anghyviawn; a chyhuddwr cyvlog.

134. Three ancestors of a person: a father; a grandfather; and a great grandfather.

135. Three joint heirs of a man: a brother; a cousin; and a second cousin.

136. Three persons who forfeit life, and who cannot be redeemed: a traitor to the country and kindred; one who shall kill another through ferocity; and a proved thief for the worth of more than four byzants.

137. Three persons who do not forfeit life: a wife in a joint theft with her husband; a boy under age; and the necessitous for the theft of food, after he has traversed three trevs, and nine houses in each trev, without obtaining a gift although asked for.

138. Three thieves subject to a camlwrw: a dog stealer; a stealer of garden herbs; and a stealer of a wild animal out of an enclosed park land.

139. There are three thefts: taking by stealth; retaining by stealth; and killing of live property by stealth: and each of the three forfeits life, and they cannot be redeemed.

140. There are three redeemable thefts: theft through fraud; theft through pilfering; and theft through concealment of circumstances: and they are redeemed by three times their lawful worth.

141. There are three peculiar properties attached to every person: inheritance; privilege; and kind: inheritance is according to privilege; privilege according to kind; and kind, as a female and male, a native and aillt, and old and young.

142. Three things free to a kindred, and its aillts under the privilege of maternity: building timber out of wild woods; hunting over wild ground; and mast gathering in wild land.

143. Three primary speakers of a court: a lord; a judge; and a surety.

144. Three secondary speakers of a court: a party; a witness; and the crier of the country.

145. Three tacit ones of a court: a lord listening to judges and justices; the judges and justices listening to a plaintiff and defendant; and all of them listening to witnesses until they become silent: for the law says, that silence is not to be urged upon a witness, lest the truth should be extinguished.

146. Three mediators in law: a lord, to maintain equity; a surety, or pledge, to preserve sincerity; and a just judge, or justice, to elucidate truth.

147. Three persons who destroy a country and kindred: a treacherous lord; an unjust judge; and an hired accuser.

CXLVIII. Tri dyn a vyddant anrhaith-oddev : un na savo wrth varn cyvraith ; ac na safo yn wyneb llys ; ac a latho ei gywlad : sev goddevadwy cyrch anrhaith arnynt ; sev yw cyrch anrhaith, dwyn yn ngavael y maint a gafer o'u daoedd cychwynawl, heb werth heb dwng arnynt ; ac eneidvaddeu a latho.

CXLIX. Tri chas cyhoedd cenedl : a latho ddyn o'i gydgenedl ; lleidyr ; a thwyllwr : sev a'u gelwir velly, am y bydd iawn i ddialwr y genedl eu cyhoeddi gan gorn gwlad yn llys, ac yn llan, ac yn mhob tyrva ddosparthus, ac ar byst yuvydion y brenin.

CL. Tri achaws gosod cyvraith : addysg er gochel anghyvraith ; gwared anghyvraith o darfawr ei gwneuthur ; ac er cospi anghyvraith yn ol y bai ag y dylit.

CLI. Tair ceinmyged cyvraith : gwared rhag anrhaith ; cospi drygwaith ; a chadarnau iawn am anghyvraith : er cynnal iawn a thangnev cymmrrawd ar wlad a chenedl o'r tri pheth hyny.

CLII. Tri bonedd cyvraith : devawd gwlad a chenedl cyn cov ; dosparth gwlad, a chenedl, ac arglwydd, yn rhaith dygynnull gwlad a chenedl benbaladr ; a chyviawnder, wrth bwyll, ac ansawdd, a gorvod. Neu val hyn y dywed ereill o ddoethion : wrth bwyll gwirionedd ; wrth syrth dichweiniau ; ac wrth rym cydwybod. Sev y bydd herwydd a ddywedaint :

CLIII. Tri chyviawnder cyvraith : gwirionedd ; gwybodaeth ; a chydwybod : a lle na chyvladdont y tri hyn yn gyvanian, ni ddylit i gyvraith ei henw : gwirionedd yw gwreiddyn barn ; cydwybod yw gwreiddyn cyvryngiad ; a gwybodaeth yw gwreiddyn cynhebyngiad a threigl hyd yn nhervyn, gan hawl, ac amddifyn, a dadlau, a thystiaddon.

CLIV. Tair colovn cynghaws : naw afaith galanas ; naw afaith lledrad ; a naw afaith tan.

CLV. Tair colovn cyvraith : devawd cyn cov a chlyw ; brenin drwy gyvraith warantedig ; a gwlad yn marn gan raith, lle ni bo na devawd, na chyvraith.

148. Three persons who become subject to confiscation : one who will not abide the decision of law ; and one who will not stand in the presence of the court ; and one who shall kill his fellow countryman : for they are amenable to a visit of spoliation ; and a visit of spoliation is, the making a seizure of what shall be found of their moveable chattels, without worth or appraisal of them ; and the life of the murderer is forfeited.

149. Three objects of detestation to a kindred : one who shall kill a person of his own kindred ; a thief ; and a swindler : they are so called, because it becomes right for the avenger of the kindred to proclaim them with the horn of the country in court, and in resort, and in every regular assembly, and upon the idiot posts of the king.

150. Three reasons for establishing law : instruction for the avoiding of what is unlawful ; reparation of what is unlawful if committed ; and for punishing what is unlawful according as the crime may demand.

151. Three excellencies of law : preserving from spoliation ; punishing evil-doing ; and assuring right for what is unlawfully done : for the support of equity and social tranquillity in a country and kindred by means of those three measures.

152. Three origins of law : custom of a country and kindred from beyond memory ; institution of country, kindred, and lord, in a conventional raith of country and kindred collectively ; and justice, according to reason, circumstance, and necessity. Or in this manner it is expressed by other wise men : according to the cogency of truth ; according to the bias of circumstances ; and according to the impulse of conscience. Thus, according to what they say, it will be :

153. Three equities of law : truth ; knowledge ; and conscience : and where these three are not conjunctive in unity of nature, law deserves not the name : truth is the root of judgment ; conscience is the root of mediation ; and knowledge is the root of guidance and progress unto a termination, in respect to claim, and defence, and suits, and witnesses.

154. Three columns of advocacy : the nine accessaries of murder ; the nine accessaries of theft ; and the nine accessaries of fire.

155. Three columns of law : custom beyond memory and hearing ; the king through authorized jurisdiction ; and the country in judgment by raith, where there shall be neither custom, nor law.

CLVI. Tri pheth nid oes namyn rhaith ddygynnull gwlad a chenedl benbaladr, gan gyfraw penteyrnedd, a biau eu tori, neu eu symud : cyvraith warantedig o deyrnedd ; devawd cyn cov a chlyw gwlad a chenedl, nas prover argywedd erni, ac o heni, sev ei bod yn erbyn cyviawnder ; ac ammod gydgyvaddev.

CLVII. Tri thor cyvraith anesgorawl : ammod warantedig o dystiadon ; devawd gyviawn cyn cov a chlyw gwlad a chenedl ; ac angenocder anesgorawl.

CLVIII. Tri thor ammod cyvreithawl : angau arglwydd, lle nas cafed tervyn llys erni, o bydd tragwydd ; clevyd yn attal cywiraw ; ac angenocdid anesgorawl.

CLIX. Tri pheth ni ddyly llys ac ynghaid varnu arnynt yn amgen no chlo tervyn : pryn cyviawn ar dir, herwydd cyvraith gymmrawd ; arglwydd yn ymlid gwirionedd rhwng gwr a gwr ; a hiroddev gwlad : sev gwlad a chenedl benbaladr, yn rhaith ddygynnull, a biau barnu, ac nid amgen.

CLX. Tri pheth a gadarnaa gynnevawd : ei haddwynder ; ei galledicder er lles gwlad a chenedl ; a'i hawdurdawd o vonedd a hawl nad elo yn erbyn cyvraith : a lle bo velly hi a gau yn erbyn cyvraith.

CLXI. Tri phrivachos rhaith gwlad : gwn-euthur neu symud cyvraith ; barnu, lle nis gellir o gyvraith parth difyg, neu ddichwain, ac angen ; a braint gwlad a chenedl yn gwarchadw rhag anghyvraith, drwy gau yn erbyn a'i gwnelo.

CLXII. Tri gwyr rhaith cenedl : ei phen-cenedl ; ei saith henadur, yn nghyvnerth ei phencenedl ; a'i theisbantyle ; sev yw hwnw gwr o'r genedl a ddewiser am ei ddoethineb a'i wybodau llen ; a'i ddewis gan goelbren, neu raith avlavar henaduriaid y genedl.

CLXIII. Tri pheth, o byddant ar wr, eve a wedd iddo vod ynbencenedl : a ddyweto gyda ei gar, ac a wrandawer ; a ymladdo gyda ei gar, ac a ovner ; ac a vechnio gyda ei gar, ac a gymerer.

CLXIV. Tri phriv anhebgor gwr rhaith : bod yn Gymro cynnwynawl, sev yw hyny, heb anach heb ledach parth bonedd ; bod yn wr cyvallwy ; a bod yn benteulu, sev yw

156. Three things that only a conventional raith of country and kindred collectively, upon the motion of the supreme ruler, can either break, or repeal : a law authorized by the sovereignty ; a custom beyond memory and hearing of country and kindred, in which, and from which, no harm can be proved, or of its being contrary to justice ; and a mutually acknowledged contract.

157. Three inevitable infractions of law : a contract authenticated by witnesses ; an equitable custom from beyond memory and hearing of country and kindred ; and inevitable necessity.

158. Three infractions of a lawful contract : death of a lord, where a decision of the court has not been obtained thereon, if it be for perpetuity ; illness preventing the fulfilment ; and inevitable necessity.

159. Three things that the court and judges are not to consider to be otherwise than settled : an equitable purchase of land, according to social law ; a lord in the pursuit of truth between man and man ; and long sufferance of a country : for to a country and kindred collectively, in a conventional raith, belongs the decision, and not otherwise.

160. Three things strengthen a general custom : its respectability ; its efficiency for the benefit of country and kindred ; and its authority as to origin and claim not being contrary to law : and where it shall exist in that manner it will bar against law.

161. Three primary reasons for a raith of country : enacting or repealing of a law ; giving judgment, where it cannot be effected by law from insufficiency, or circumstance, or necessity ; and privilege of country and kindred in guarding against a contravention of law, by barring against such as shall effect it.

162. Three raith-men of a kindred : its chief of kindred ; its seven elders, as co-adjutors of its chief of kindred ; and its representative ; and he is a man of the kindred who shall be chosen on account of his wisdom and his literary knowledge ; and to be chosen by ballot, or silent vote of the elders of the kindred.

163. Three things, if possessed by a man, make him fit to be a chief of kindred : that he should speak on behalf of his kin, and be listened to ; that he should fight on behalf of his kin, and be feared ; and that he should be security on behalf of his kin, and be accepted.

164. Three primary indispensables of a raith-man : being an innate Cymro, that is, without tainted or mixed kin in respect to descent ; being an efficient man ; and hyny, yn wr gwraig a phlant o briod ; sev heb y rhai hyny nis gellir teulu, yn nghyvrraith ; sev ni wna wr yn anmraint ac yn anmrawd a vo perchen teulu, can ys erddynt ev a wna gydwybod.

CLXV. Tri anhebgor pencenedl : bod yn wr cyvallwy ; a bod yn hynav o wyr cyvallwy ei genedl hyd yn mhen y nawved ach ; a bod yn benteulu, sev yn wr gwraig a phlant o briodas deilwng : a phob un o'r genedl a vydd yn wr ac yn gar iddo ; a gair ei air ev ar air pop un o'r genedl.

CLXVI. Tri anhebgor teisbantyle : gwr cyvallwy = Gymro cynnwynawl ; gwr gwarantedig o ddoethineb awenbwyll, a gwybodau anrhydeddus gwladolion ; ac yn wr teulu, o briodas deilwng, yn berchen gwraig a phlant. Ac o raith avlavar doethion y genedl ei breinier ev yn nawdd a braint pencenedl ; ac eve a vydd dros y genedl, ac yn eu plaid, yn wr llys a llan, ac yn wr penraith, gan ddoethineb a gwybodau, ac yn wr pell ac agos yn nhravodau a dichweiniau y genedl ; a braint iddo drwydded paladr o'i genedl, yn un a'r pencenedl ; ac yn mhob tyrva cenedl athraw a chynghor y bydd, ac yn gydgyvarail a'r pencenedl.

CLXVII. Tri achaws breiniaw teisbantyle : dirpryaw yn nhra nas gallai y pencenedl ; addysg doethineb i'r genedl ; ac achub doethineb cenedl a gwlad a chywlad, trwy ddywain priv ddoethion cenedloedd y Cymry, yn wyr llys a barn yn ngorsedd ddygynnull Cymru benbaladr, a hevyd yn nygynnull arglwydd cyvoeth a'i wlad, ac yn mhob rhaith wahanredawl gwlad a chenedl. Ac nis gellir hyn yn amgen o vodd no braint i ddoethion ; can nas dylit na deddv na dir ar ddoethion ; ac eisioes, nis dylit dygynnull heb ddoethion, can ys goreu barn barn doethion. Sev nis gellir gwarantu doethineb ar bencenedl ; achaws hyny, braint ac angen i bob cenedl ei theisbantyle.

being the chief of a household, or being a man with wife and children by marriage ; and without those there cannot be a household, according to law ; for a man will not act against privilege and against justice who has a household, since for their sake he will be guided by conscience.

165. Three indispensables of a chief of kindred : being an efficient man ; being the eldest of the efficient men of his kindred unto the end of the ninth descent ; and being the chief of a household, or a man with a wife and children by legitimate marriage : and every one of the kindred is to be a man and a kin to him ; and his word is paramount to the word of every one of the kindred.

166. Three indispensables of a representative : being an efficient man of an innate Cymro ; being a man acknowledged as having the wisdom of inventive genius, and honourable political sciences ; and being a household man, by legitimate marriage, having a wife and children. And it is by the silent vote of the wise men of the kindred that he is to be inducted under the protection and privilege of the chief of kindred ; and he is to represent his kindred, and act in its behalf, as a man of court and assembly, and a man of supreme raith, endowed with wisdom and sciences, and a man to be far and near in respect to the affairs and circumstances of his kindred ; and by privilege he has spear support from his kindred, in the same manner as the chief of kindred ; and in every assembly of the kindred he is to be the teacher and adviser, and to be consociate with the chief of kindred.

167. Three reasons for privileging a representative : to act as a substitute in extremity where the chief of kindred could not act ; to instruct the kindred in wisdom ; and to perpetuate the wisdom of kindred and country and federate country, by convening the principal wise men of the kindreds of the Cymry, as men of court and judgment in a conventional session of Cymru universally, and, likewise, in the convention of lord of territory and his country, and in every special raith of country and kindred. And this cannot be accomplished in any other manner than by granting privilege to wise men ; since the wise are to be neither subject to decree nor restraint ; and, likewise, there is not to be a convention without wise men, for the judgment of the wise is the best judgment. And wisdom cannot be guaranteed in a chief of kindred ; and, therefore, it is a provision of privilege and necessity for every kindred to have its representative.

CLXVIII. Tri pheth a wnant gyvallwy: cyvlawn a pherfaith y synwyrâu corforawl, sev yn arbenigion, y clyw, a'r olwg, a'r ymmod, sev y dywed cyvraith, tri chyvallwy corf, clyw, golwg, ac ymmod; synwyrbwyll meddwl a deall, o reddv ac athrylith; a chadernyd: sev y tri a wnant gyvallwy ar geudawd, a gwybodau gwladolion, gwarantedig o athraw a dangaws, neu o raith avlavar dengwyr a deugain, o Gymry cynnwyrbawwl o'i genedl ei hun.

CLXIX. Tair fordd y cadarnaer ac y breinier pob deddvedigaeth ar wlad a chenedl. Gorsedd ddygynnull Cymru benbaladr; sev hyny, holl wladoedd, a chyvoethau, a theyrneddau, a chorvenau cenedl y Cymry, gan bencedloedd, a theisbantylcoedd, a gwyr rhaith, yn gydgymmrawd yn ngorsedd ddygynnull gwlad a chywlad, a chenedl, a chydgenedl: can nid oes namyn un wlad ac un genedl ar Gymru benbaladr: ac, yn yr orsedd hono, gwneuthur, neu symud, neu wellau cyvreithau, yn ol y bo achos, a'u deddvv yn warrantedig, o gymhwyll, a chymmrawd, a chydsynwyr y dygynnull. Ail fordd, braint gorsedd gyvallwy gwlad a chywlad; nid amgen, llys teyrnedd gwlad a chywlad, ac ynndi deddvv a vo govyn ar newydd, neu ar wellau, neu ar symud hen o gyvraith a chymmrawd; a doddi a wneler ar osteg a rhybudd y llysoedd, yn holl gyvoethau gwlad a chenedl Cymru benbaladr, er gwellau, neu gadarnau, neu wrthryn, a gwrthod, val y barnawr yn achaws, gan bwyll a chyviawnder; a chynnal y cerdded val hyn, yny gwyper barn y genedl, ac y cafer cymmrawd y gan yr holl lysoedd, heb wrthryn, heb wrthneu; a phan a'i cafer, doddi hyny ar osteg a rhybudd y gorseddau a'r llysoedd holl hyd yn mhen y tair blynedd. A chymmrawd gorsedd pen y tair blynedd a elwir gorsedd gyvallwy; a'i threigiaw drwy yr holl gyvoethau; a hono a dderchaiv, ar a ddeddver, braint dygynnull gwlad a chenedl Cymru benbaladr. Trydydd fordd y dodder neu y symuder, cyvraith yn warrantedig o awdurdawd gwlad a chenedl, a vydd dan osteg a rhybudd hyd yn nghyvallwy; sev doddi a vyer ei ddeddvv yn gadarn ar osteg a rhybudd undydd a blwyddyn, gan waedd gwlad a chywlad, yn mhob llys, ac yn mhob llan, a phob fair a marchnad, a phob arall = dyrva ddotharus gwlad a chywlad, hyd oni chafer barn y gwladocedd a'r llysoedd, a gwellaad a chyweiriad ar a geinmygawr wrth vodd gwlad a chywlad, a gwybod nad oes na gair na gwrthryn yn ei erbyn; a phan wyper hyny, doddi hyny ar osteg a rhybudd undydd a blwyddyn

168. Three things that constitute efficiency: being complete and perfect as to bodily senses, that is, as primaries, the hearing, the sight, and locomotion, for the law says, the three efficiencies of the body are hearing, sight, and motion; the reasoning faculty of the mind and understanding, from habit and intuition; and fortitude: these three effect efficiency of intellect, as to political sciences, authenticated by a master and demonstration, or by the silent vote of fifty men, being innate Cymry of his own kindred.

169. Three ways by which every institution of a country and kindred shall be confirmed and privileged. In a conventional session of Cymru universally; that is, of all the countries, and territories, and principalities, and districts of the kindred of the Cymry, by chiefs of kindreds, representatives, and raith-men, mutually associated in a conventional session of country and federate country, kindred, and allied kindred: since there is only one country and one kindred in Cymru collectively: and, in that session, laws are to be made, or abrogated, or improved, as occasion may require, and to be instituted authoritatively, by mutual consideration, decision, and consent of the convention. The second way, by the privilege of an efficient session of country and federate country; to wit, the sovereign court of country and federate country, and therein to institute what may be required anew, or to improve, or repeal an old law and compact; and then to put what shall be enacted into the proclamation and notice of the courts, in all the territories of the country and kindred of the Cymry universally, to improve, or confirm, or oppose, and reject, as may be judged necessary, according to reason and justice; and in this manner to carry on proceedings, until the judgment of the kindred shall be known, and the joint decision of all the courts be obtained, without opposition, without contravention; and when that shall be had, to put it into the proclamation and notice of all the sessions and courts unto the end of three years. And the unanimous decision of a session at the end of three years is called an efficient session; and is to be promulgated throughout all the territories; and that imposes, upon what has been instituted, the privilege of the convention of the country and kindred of the Cymry universally. The third way that a law is enacted or abrogated, guaranteed by the authority of a country and kindred, is by proclamation and notice unto the period of efficiency; that is, to gan waedd gwlad, val o'r blaen, hyd yn nghyvallwy, sev hyd yn nghwbl gwaedd y tair blynedd; ac yna cadarn o gymmrawd Cymru benbaladr y bydd; a chyvraith gan bob gwlad a chyvoeth, a phob teyrnedd, a phob llys a llan gwlad a chywlad; a gogyvuwch a gogyvurdd a gorsedd ddygygnnull gwlad a chywlad y bydd a wneler val hyn; ac nid rhaid cyrchu rhaith cywlad ar gyvraith a wneler velly. Canys cyvraith a ddywed, cawas vodd a chymmrawd Cymru benbaladr, heb wrthryn, heb wrthair, am hyny cadarn; can ys onis cyrcher rhaith, ar a wneler val hyn, cyn pen y tair blynedd a'r trinydd traphen, bernir bodd gwlad a chywlad, a chenedl a chydgenedl, ar a ddeddwyd; can nis gellir llai no bod gwybodus i bawb a wnaethbwyd gan waedd gwlad, yn gyvreithawl o lcoedd ac amser, dan goron neu vrait y deyrnedd, neu y cyvoeth wahanredawl y buad, gan roddi lle a llwydd i bob gwthneu, a gwrthair, a gwrthryn galledig o bwyll ac achaws yn geinmygiadawl.

CLXX. Tair colovn rhaith gwlad, o ba ryw bynag y bo: teyrn cywlad, neu arglwydd cyvoeth; pencenedloedd; a henaduriaid cenedl, a doethion gwlad, sev teisbantyleoedd, yn warantedig o vrait, gan raith aviavar cenedl, sev gan goelbren ddoeparthus henadur ar henadur.

CLXXI. Tri chyfraw gwlad, ai yn rhaith ai yn amgen y bo: teyrn, neu arglwydd cyvoeth; pencenedl; a theisbantyle: sev davawd neu air un neu arall o'r tri hyn make known what is intended to be affirmatively instituted by a proclamation and notice of a year and a day, by the cry of country and federate country, in every court, and in every resort, in every fair and market, and every other regulated assembly of country and federate country, until there shall be obtained the judgment of the countries and the courts, and amendment and correction of what shall be required to the satisfaction of country and federate country, and to know that there is neither a word nor objection against it; and when that shall be known, to publish it by proclamation and notice of a year and a day, by the cry of the country, as before, unto the period of efficiency, or until the completion of the cry of the three years; and then it stands confirmed as the united act of Cymru universally; and it becomes the law of every country and territory, and of every sovereignty, and of every court and assembly of country and federate country; and equivalent and coequal with what emanates from a conventional session of country and federate country what is thus enacted; and it is not necessary to have recourse to the raith of a federate country as to a law thus enacted. For the law says, it has obtained the consent and concurrence of Cymru universally, without resistance, without gainsaying, and therefore is confirmed; for unless resort shall be had to a raith, as to what shall be thus enacted, before the expiration of three years and the three over days, the consent of country and federate country, of kindred and allied kindred, is considered as obtained, upon what has been instituted; since it cannot be otherwise than known to every one what has been done by the cry of country, lawfully as to places and times, under the crown or privilege of the sovereignty, or of the particular territory where it originated, by affording room and opportunity for every contravention, and gainsaying, and of every possible resistance from reason and cause, in an honourable way.

170. Three columns of raith of country, of whatever kind it may be: the sovereign of a federate country, or the lord of a territory; chiefs of kindreds; and elders of kindred, and wise men of a country, or representatives, verified as to privilege, by the silent vote of kindred, or by systematic ballot of elder upon elder.

171. Three agitations of country, whether for raith or otherwise it may be: by sovereign, or lord of a territory; by chief of kindred; and by representative: that is, y cyfroer gwlad a chywlad, gan waedd gwlad yn ddosparthus, gan ddevawd a chyvraith.

CLXXII. Tair gorsedd gwlad y sydd: gorsedd ddygynnull gwlad ac arglwydd; gorsedd, neu lys, barn a chyvraith, gan yngnaid; a gorsedd beirdd, wrth vrait a devawd beirdd ynys Prydain.

CLXXIII. Tair nawdd gyfredin y sydd: nawdd gorsedd, neu lys gwlad; nawdd golychwyd; a nawdd arad ac atgor yn ngwaith.

CLXXIV. Tri pheth anhebgor ar orsedd, neu lys gyvallwy: ei bod yn warrantedig o vrait ac awdurdawd a'i lluniaetho ac a'i cynnalio; ei bod dan nawdd gosteg a rhybudd undydd a blwyddyn, gan waedd gwlad yn gyvreithawl, a threiglau hyd ymhen y tair blynedd a thridiau traphen; a'i bod yn warrantedig o le ac amser a'i cynnelir, sev hyny egored lle ac amser yn ddevodawl, a lle bo velly, nid rhaid amgen ar osteg a rhybudd: a deddvedig vydd a wneler gan varn hyd gyvallwy yn mhob llys a gorsedd gwlad a chywlad, hyd y cerddo swydd a braint yr orsedd a'r llys a'i gwnelo.

CLXXV. Tair rhaith cyvraith y sydd: rhaith ddygynnull teyrnedd a chenedl gwlad a chywlad er deddvw, gan wneuthur, neu symud, neu wellau cyvraith, ac a elwir rhaith teyrnedd a chywlad; ail, rhaith gwlad, a elwir rhaith trichannyn; trydydd, rhaith llys, a hono a vydd gan vrawdwy neu henaduriaid gwlad neu genedl, yn nawdd ac yn mraint llys a'i doto, o seithnyn hyd yn nengwyr a deugain.

CLXXVI. Tair llys cyvraith y sydd: llys cantrev a chwmd; llys benadur, sev llys arglwydd, neu vrenin, a'i gyvoeth; a llys ddygynnull teyrnedd a chywlad, a hono yn ben ar y ddwy ereill.

CLXXVII. Tri awdurdawd devodau llys a chyvraith: llys benadur y brenin; cyvraith gwlad; ac arver o bob un onaddynt.

CLXXVIII. O dri pheth y mae cyvraith: anghenion dichweiniau; deall cyvryn y doethion; a chyvundeb cenedl a theyrnedd yn rhaith.

by the announcement or word of one or other of these three a country and federate country are to be agitated, by the regular cry of country, according to custom and law.

172. There are three sessions of country: a conventional session of country and lord; a session, or court, of judgment and law, by judges; and a session of bards, according to the privilege and custom of the bards of the isle of Britain.

173. There are three common protections: the protection of a session, or court of country; the protection of a place of worship, and the protection of a plough and team at work.

174. Three indispensable things of an efficient session, or court: its being warranted by the privilege and authority of such as shall order and hold it; its being under the protection of proclamation and notice of a year and a day, by the lawful cry of country, and proceeding unto the end of three years and three days over; and by its being authorized as to the time and place of holding it, or that the time and place be open as by custom, and where it shall be so, the proclamation and notice require no variation: and what is done becomes instituted by judgment unto efficiency in every court and session of country and federate country, so far as the function and privilege of the session and the court that shall enact it may extend.

175. There are three raiths of law: the sovereign raith of convention of kindred of country and federate country for lawgiving, by enacting, or abrogating, or improving of law, and which is called the raith of sovereignty and federate country; secondly, the raith of country, which is called the raith of three hundred persons; thirdly, the raith of court, and that is by judges or elders of a country or kindred, under the protection and under the privilege of the court that shall give it, from seven persons unto fifty persons.

176. There are three courts of law: a court of a cantrev and cymwd; a superior court, or a court of lord, or king, with his dominion; and a conventional court of sovereignty and federate country, and that supreme over the other two.

177. Three authorities for the customs of court and law: the superior court of a king; the law of country; and the practice of each of them.

178. From three things does law exist: the necessities of circumstances; the mutually excited intellect of the wise; and the accordance of the nation and the sovereignty in a raith.

CLXXXIX. Tri anhebgor gorsedd a chyvraith : rhwym devodau ; cov cyvarwyddydd ; a dadleuon.

CLXXX. Tri pheth a gau yn erbyn cyvraith : hir oddev gwlad a chenedl ; cyvnewidiau amser a dichweiniau yn difrwythaw cyvraith a devawd ; ac ammod warantedig o dystiadon cyvreithawl.

CLXXXI. Tri gwrthrym devawd : bonedd anghrugant ; ei gorthrymder ; ac anghraith ddrwg : a lle bo un o'r tri, petrus vydd ; a lle bo y tri yn nghyd, cauedig vydd yn ei herbyn.

CLXXXII. Tri phetrus cyvraith : twyll ; cel ; a chamvarn ; gwedi lithraw amser arnynt : ac yna nis gellir na deail na diwyg ar un o'r tri, rhag annilyrwydd yr hawl.

CLXXXIII. Tri pheth nid oes ar nebun atdeb drostynt : abredig nad elo yn erbyn cyvraith ; gweithred nas gellir dangaws argywedd o heni ; a chafaeliad cyll ni wypo neb yn ngwlad pwy a'i colles : ac nid oes ar neb atdeb yn nghyvraith am y tri pheth hyn, namyn hawl arddangaws ; a lle nas galler hyny, tervyn.

CLXXXIV. Tair tystiolaeth gadarn : llw drwy bervedd ; cydgyvaddev ; a dichweiniau anegorawl nas gellir petrusder ernynt.

CLXXXV. Tri pheth a drechant ar gyvraith : a wnelo y brenin, i ddilyd gwir a chyviawn, ac i wneuthur cydwybod a thru-garedd ; braint, lle nis gellir a elo yn ei herbyn ; ac ammod gydgyvaddev, yn warantedig o dystiadon.

CLXXXVI. Tri gwrandaw llys ac ynad : cwyn ; deisyv ; ac atdeb : a braint rhaith gwlad, gan gyfraw ei bencenedl, i na chafao ei wrandaw.

CLXXXVII. Tri datgan llys ac ynad : hawl ; atdeb ; a barn.

CLXXXVIII. Tri pheth yn bendivaddeu y dylai teyrnedd ac yngneidiaeth eu cynnal, a'u cyvnawdd, a'u cadarnau, yn ngwlad a chenedl : gwirionedd ; cyviawnder ; a thangnev. Sev y dywed ereill : gwirionedd ; gwybodau ; a thangnev.

CLXXXIX. Tri devnydd hawl : golwg ; gair ; a gweithred.

CXC. Tri diwyneb gwlad y sydd : brenin ; golychwydwr gorseddawg ; a chyvraith : sev, lle bont y tri, nid rhaid gwyneb gwlad.

179. Three indispensables of session and law : the tie of customs ; the record of experience ; and suits.

180. Three things that bar against law : long forbearance of country and kindred ; changes of time and circumstances rendering law and custom ineffective ; and a contract authenticated by lawful witnesses.

181. Three disabling effects in a custom : uncertain origin ; its oppressiveness ; and bad example : and where any one of the three exists, it becomes ambiguous ; and where the three exist together, they bar against it.

182. Three ambiguities of law : deception ; concealment ; and wrong judgment ; after time has passed over them : for then no one of the three can be unravelled or amended, from the uncertainty of the claim.

183. Three things for which no one is to be answerable : a whim that does not go in opposition to law ; a deed that no harm can be showed to proceed from it ; and the finding of a thing that no one in the country knows who lost it : and no one is to answer in law as to these three things, except to a demonstrative claim ; and where that cannot be maintained, there is a termination.

184. Three strong testimonies : a direct oath ; mutual confession ; and inevitable circumstances to which no doubt can be attached.

185. Three things that overcome law : that which is done by the king, to pursue truth and justice, and for the sake of conscience and mercy ; privilege, where nothing can be advanced in opposition to it ; and a mutually acknowledged contract, authenticated by witnesses.

186. Three things to be listened to by court and judge : a plaint ; a request ; and an answer : and privilege of raith of country, upon the agitation of his chief of kindred, to him who shall not be listened to.

187. Three announcements of court and judge : a claim ; an answer ; and a judgment.

188. Three things particularly that the kingly office and judicature are to support, protect, and confirm, in a country and kindred : truth ; equity ; and tranquillity. Or, as said by others : truth ; knowledge ; and tranquillity.

189. Three grounds of action : a sight ; a word ; and a deed.

190. There are three presentials of a country : a king ; an officiating priest ; and law : for, where those three are, the presence of the country is not necessary.

cxci. Tri difer rhag gwys gorsedd neu lys y sydd : llivoedd yn avonydd, heb bynt, heb geubalau; gwaedd gwlad rhag llu gorwlad, yn nghlyw yr udgyrn; a chlevyd anesgorawl yn gorfod.

cxcii. Tri avlavar anianawl : maban cyn oed pedwar ar ddeg; clav a dolurus gorweddawg; a mud cysevin, neu vud o ddichwain, na wypo ar lythyr.

cxcm. Tri rhyw briodoriion y sydd : cynnwynolion anianawl; gwyr llys; a gwyr llen : sev y cyntav o'r tri a elwir lleygion, ac iddynt y mae braint lle ar dir, a chyvarwys; ac i'r ail y bydd braint swydd, herwydd a ddyweto cyvraith; ac i'r trydyddion, sev y gwyr llen, y mae braint athrawon, sev dogu iddo o bob arad o vewn y swydd y bo ynddi yn warantedig yn athraw; a'i dir braint yn rhydd iddo; a'i drwydded yn mraint ei wybodau.

cxcm. Tair braint gyvreithawl y sydd : braint anianawl; braint tir; a braint swydd : ac yn nawdd gwlad a chenedl yn rhaith y doded pob braint, a'r cyfraw ar bencenedloedd.

cxcm. Tair swydd y sydd ar athrawon gwlad a chenedl, a gwyr llen : doddi addysg i'r lleygion, yn eu teuluoedd, ac yn ngolychwyd, ac yn llysoedd y cyvoeth, ac yn ngorseddau gwarantedig o le ac amser; ail, cadw cov gwarantedig ar vreiniau, a devodau, a gwelygorddau, ac achau bonedd, gan briodasau teilyngion, ac ar weithredoedd anrhydeddus, ac ar bob goreuau gwlad a chenedl, ac ar a wneler yn llys, ac yn llan, ac yn heddwch, ac yn rhyvel; trydydd, dylynt vod yn barod bob lle ac amser gwarantedig wrth raid gwlad a chenedl, ac a wasanaethont, tan obr a thrwydded, i ddodi addysg a chynghor a gwybod ar geinmygedau, ac i ddatgan cov gwarantedig, ac i ddangos cyvarwyddydd, ac i yru cyvarwyddydd ar a vo rhaid a govyn gan achaws gwlad a chenedl; megis y bydd negyddiaethau gwlad a gorwlad, a llys a llan; ac i drevnu gostegau a rhybuddiau, yn warantedig o gyvraith ac awdurdawd, a'u doddi yn mhen gwaedd gwlad; ac i lyvraw a ddoter gan varn a devawd ar gov llyvr a llythyr : ac amgen no hyn o swyddau nis dylit eu gyru ar athrawon gwlad, o wyr llen a llythyr a gwybodau ceudawd a doethineb, rhag nas gellynt eu gwasanaethu,

191. There are three defences against the summons of a session or a court : floods in rivers, without bridges, without cobbles; the cry of the country against a border country host, within hearing of the trumpets; and inevitable illness preventing.

192. Three naturally silent : a child before the age of fourteen; the sick and the bed-ridden diseased; one originally dumb, or dumb by accident, who cannot read.

193. There are three sorts of proprietors : those naturally born free; men of the court; and clergy : the first of the three are called laics, and to them pertains the privilege of location upon land, and grants; and to the second there is the privilege of office, according as the law shall set forth; and to the third class, or the clergy, there pertains the privilege of teachers, with an allowance to each from every plough within the district where he shall officiate as an authorized teacher; and his land of privilege free to him; and his maintenance secured to him under the privilege of his sciences.

194. There are three lawful privileges : natural privilege; privilege of land; and privilege of office : and under the protection of country and kindred by raith has every privilege been conferred, the agitation for which being vested in chiefs of kindreds.

195. There are three functions pertaining to the teachers of the country and kindred, as being clergymen : imparting instruction to the laity, in their households, and at worship, and in the courts of the territory, and in sessions authorized as to time and place; second, keeping authentic record of privileges, and customs, and tribe-stocks, and genealogy of descents, with legitimate marriages, and of honourable actions, and of all excellencies of a country and kindred, and of what shall be done in court, and in assembly, and in peace, and in war; thirdly, they are to be ready at every authorized place and time at the need of the country and kindred, and they shall minister, for fee and maintenance, to impart instruction and advice and information in respect to great events, and to proclaim authentic record, and to demonstrate skill, and to urge skill in what shall be necessary and in demand for the cause of a country and kindred; such as in regard to the negotiations of country and border country, and court and assembly; and to arrange proclamations and notices, as warranted by law and authority, and to put them on the cry of a gwneuthur a ddylynt parth eu swyddau n athrawon gwarantedig.

cxvii. Tri chyvrwym gwladoldeb: gwybodau; brawd; a llavuriaeth.

cxviii. Tri thrwyddedawg gorseddawg y sydd: bardd; ynad; a theisbantyle.

cxviiii. Tri thrwyddedawg dichwain y sydd: celvydd anianawl a wnelo nid llai no gorchest ar gelvyddydd, er lles brodor-iaeth; anghyviaith a ddiangawr o long a doro yn mor; a brydd, sev a wareto Gymro yn mhyd angeuawl.

cxviiii. Tri thrwyddedawg bydawwg y sydd: oedranus; maban, sev plentyn, ai gwr ai gwraig y bo; ac estron anghyviaith: sev yw bydawwg, un na vytho arno na swydd na gorchwyl, a'i drwydded yn rhad gan gyswyn paladr.

cc. O dri pheth y cafant drwyddedogion eu cyvarwys: pumerwi rhyddion; a lle nis gellir hyny gan ddichwaint, ceiniog arad; a lle nis gellir hyny, ceiniog baladr, neu gyswyn paladr; sev hyny dogned, gymmedr ag achaws, y gan bob teuluawg o'r genedl.

cc. Tair palvawd ni ddiwygir: un tad ar ei vab, yn ei geryddu er addysg, neu am ei vai; un pencenedl ar ei gar, er cosp am ei wall, ac er cov a chynghor; ac un arglwydd ar ei wr, yn nydd cad a brwydr, yn ei reoli.

ccii. Tair dyrnawd arglwydd ar ei wr, yn ei reoli: un a'i vrysyll, sev ei swydd-wialen; un a phaeled ei gledd; ac un a phaeled ei law: ac nid oes saraad ar un o'r tri hyny, namyn addysg, a dangaws, a rhybudd rhag a ddrycai.

cciii. Tair gorsav cynnevawd: cynnal dydd devodawl i ddechreu gorsedd a dadl a barn; lle honaid gwybodedig yn ngolwg a chlyw gwlad a chenedl, mal y gwypo pob un y man a'r lle, megis y gwyr yr amser a'r dydd; a braint cyrch yn heddd a thangnev, gan ddevawd gadarn gwlad a country; and to enter what may be promulgated of judgment and custom upon record of book and writing: and other than these functions ought not to be imposed upon the teachers of the country, as men of learning and literature and intellectual sciences and wisdom, lest they should not be able to serve them, and to accomplish what may be incumbent on them in their functions of authorized teachers.

196. Three mutual bonds of a community: sciences; judicature; and husbandry.

197. There are three presiding functionaries entitled to free support: a bard; a judge; and a representative.

198. There are three accidental objects of free support: a natural genius who shall achieve nothing less than an exploit in respect to art, for the benefit of a community; one ignorant of the language who may escape from a ship wrecked at sea; and a self devoted one, or one who shall rescue a Cymro from mortal danger.

199. There are three freely-supported inmates: an aged person; an infant, or a child, whether it be a male or female; and a stranger ignorant of the language: an inmate is one who has neither office nor employment, having his maintenance gratuitous by spear charge.

200. From three things are those who have free maintenance to obtain their support: five free erws; and where that by any circumstance is not available, then from a plough penny; and where that is not available, then from a spear penny, or a spear charge; and which means an allowance, regulated by the occasion, from every chief of household of the kindred.

201. Three slaps not to be resented: one of a father upon his son, in correcting him for instruction, or for his fault; one by a chief of kindred upon his kin, for punishment of his neglect, and for remembrance and counsel; and one by a lord upon his man, in the day of battle and conflict, in keeping him to order.

202. Three blows of a lord upon his man, in ordering him: one with his truncheon or his rod of office; one with the flat part of his sword; and one with the palm of his hand: and there is no saraad in any one of those three; but they are for instruction, and admonition, and warning, against what might injure.

203. Three settled forms of custom: maintenance of an accustomed day for beginning a session and plea and judgment; a conspicuous and known place in the sight and hearing of country and kindred, so that every one may know the spot and place, as he knows the time and the chenedl, ac na bo noeth arv yn erbyn nebun a gyrchai yr orsedd : ac heb y cyvryw vrait, nis gellir cynnal gorsedd deilwng, er dosparth, a barn, ac addysg gwlad a chenedl, mal a'i govyn cyviawnder, a thangnev, ac angenion, a dichweiniau gwlad a chywlad, ac mal y gweddai ar wlad addwyn, yn arail trevnu, a gwybodau daionus ac anrhydeddus.

ccv. Tri anhebgor llys : arglwydd, yn trevnu gwarantred, ysgolaig, neu len, yn gov a datgan ; ac ynghaid, neu vrawdwy, i varnu : ac hebddynt nis gellir llys cyvreithawl.

ccv. Tri anhebgor cyvraith : braint, sev gwarant ; ac ynad ; a thyst : sev y bydd anghyfraw pob cyvraith hebddynt.

ccvi. O dri pheth y mae tyst cyvreithawl : gwr cyvallwy ; gwr fydd ; a gwr cymmrawd.

ccvii. O dri pheth y mae barn yn mraint cyvraith : tyst ; dichwain ; a chydwybod : ac nis dylit ar gyvraith, ac a varnai cyvraith, namyn cydwybod, yn nesav ac a aller, herwydd tyst a gwirionedd, gan gyviawnder.

ccviii. Tair rhagswydd llys : cynghellawr ; canllaw, neu bleidiwr ; a rhingyll : sev rhagovynion llys a'u gelwir, can y gellir llys hebddynt.

ccix. Tri dyn a ddylynt gan y brenin, neu arglwydd llys, davodogion drostynt yn llys : gwraig, neu venyw ; avlavar anianawl ; ac alltud anghyviaith ; ac i'r alltud hevyd y dylit nawdd ac ymborth gan ddogned paladr ; sev hyny dawn gwlad ac arglwydd, rhag ei varw o newyn ac annwyd, yn a'i doter yn ei ansawdd parth gwlad a chenedl.

ccx. Tri mud gorsedd : un, arglwydd, neu vrenin, sev nid iawn iddo ev vod yn raglavar, namyn gwrandaer ; a gwedi clywed a glywawr, llevaru a welo yn rhaid, ac yn mhwyll cyvraith, a herwydd barn a ddylit gan gyvraith ; ynad, ac nid iawn iddo ev ei lavar, onis dospartho ei varn, herwydd a ddangoser yn ei lys gan warant a thyst, ac a ddywetont y brawdwy ; a mach, sev nid rhwym iddo ateb, namyn i'r ynad neu y brawdwy.

day ; and privilege of resort in peace and tranquillity, under the powerful compact of country and kindred, and that there may not be a drawn weapon against any one that may resort to the session : and without such a privilege, an appropriate session cannot be held for the regulation, and judgment, and instruction of a country and kindred, as it may be required by the justice, and tranquillity, and necessities, and circumstances of a country and federate country, and as it might be meet for a civilized country, in upholding regulations, and commendable and honourable sciences.

204. Three indispensables of a court : a lord, regulating authority ; a scholar, or clerk, for record and recital ; and judges, or justices, for deciding : and without them there cannot be a lawful court.

205. Three indispensables of law : privilege, that is warrant ; a judge ; and a witness : for every law must be inert without them.

206. Three things constitute a lawful witness : that he be an efficient man ; a religious man ; and a social man.

207. By three things judgment assumes the privilege of law : testimony ; circumstance ; and conscience : and there is not required in law, and what the law decides, but to be guided by conscience, as near as possibly, according to testimony and truth, and consistent with equity.

208. Three sub-offices of a court : that of a canghellor ; of a guider, or partisan ; and of an apparitor : they are called the sub-requisites of a court, since a court can be holden without them.

209. Three persons for whom the king, or the lord of the court, is to assign advocates in the court : a woman, or female ; one that is naturally mute ; and an alltud ignorant of the language ; and to the alltud likewise there ought to be protection and sustenance by spear allowance ; that is, a grant from the country and the lord, lest he die by famine and cold, until he shall be placed in his station in respect to country and kindred.

210. Three mutes of a session : first, the lord, or the king, as it is not right for him to be prolocutory, but to listen ; and after hearing what is to be heard, to speak what he shall see requisite, and in unity with law, and according to the judgment required by law ; a judge, and it is not meet for him to speak, until he shall have determined his judgment, according to what shall be shown in his court by warrant and testimony, and what the justices shall say ; and a surety, and he is not bound to answer, but to the judge or the justices.

ccxi. Tair dadl nis dylit ond ger bron yngnaid a brawdwr cyweithas: cymeryd dyn i genedl, neu ei wrthladd o genedl, neu varnu goresgynaeth i vab aillt o vam-wys, ar ei bedwerygwr, neu i Gymro carddychwel; ail, dadl tir a daiar; trydedd, tangnevu rhwng gwledydd a chenedloedd, yn rhyvel, a galanasau: sev nis dylit tragwyddoli y dadlau hyny, onid yn oes yr arglwydd, neu a ddoto yn ei le.

ccxii. Tri pheth y sydd ar ynad eu gwn-euthur yn llys: dillwng cyvarchau wrth raid y brenin, neu raid gwlad a chenedl; datgan a dosparthu dadleuoedd a chynhenau o vewn ei lys; a chadarnau, ar ei air cyvraith, a varnont y brawdwr; a hyny dan wystleidiaeth, lle a'i govyno cyvraith.

ccxiii. Tri rhyw ynad y sydd: ynad llys benadur un; a hwnw a vydd yn bencynghor ac yn ben cymmrawd teyrnedd y cyvoeth, ac a ddyly vod yn ddiymbaid gyda'r brenin, neu arglwydd y cyvoeth, yn gov cyvraith iddo, er iawn varnu a ddelo ger bron a'i swydd o vrawdwr yr holl deyrnas dan ei thervynau; ail, ynad cwmwd, ac arno y mae cynnal llys, a chov cyvraith, a'i datgan; a llys y cwmwd a vydd man y bythawr yn nghwyn ac yn hawl, ac yno y cynnail yr ynad hi, a chynnal dadleuau: canys cyvraith a ddywed, goreu a'i barnawr man a'i gwelawr; trydydd ynad brawdwr braint, sev hwnw tiriawg; ac eve a vydd wr llys yn rhaith, ac yn nghymmrawd llys cwmwd a chantrev, yn Nyved, a Morganwg, a Gwent; canys brawdwr pob tiriawg cyvallwy, herwydd devawd y gwledydd hyny: ac ar varn nis dylit llai no saith o'r cyvryw vrawdwr, ac o hyny hyd yn nengwr a deugain; a'u barn a'u brawd hwy a elwir rhaith llys.

ccxiv. Tri dyn ni ddylit yngneidiaeth iddynt: dyn anghyvallwy, sev byddar, neu ddall, neu evrydd, neu glavr, neu orphwyll-og, neu vud, neu a vo ag attal anianawl ar ei lavar; ail yw alltud, neu vab aillt cyn goreagynaeth; sev cyn y cyrho vrait gynwynawl, sev braint nawved ach; ac ni ddylai vab aillt oruchavu ar briodorion cynwynawl; trydydd, gwr annysgedig yn nghyvrith a gwybodau gwladolion, sev

211. Three suits that are not to be preferred but in the presence of judges and competent justices: receiving of a person into a kindred, or the rejecting of him from a kindred, or the adjudging of possession to an aillt by maternity, being the fourth man, or to a car-returning Cymro; secondly, a suit for land and soil; thirdly, pacification between countries and kindreds in times of war, and murders: for these suits are not to be perpetuated, but during the life of the then lord, or whom he may put in his place.

212. There are three things incumbent upon a judge to do in court: to send commissions at the need of the king, or at the need of the country and kindred; to sum up and determine pleadings and disputes brought into his court; and to confirm, by his word of law, what the justices shall adjudge; and that under pledge, where the law shall demand it.

213. There are three kinds of judges: a judge of the superior court is one; and he is to be the chief adviser and the chief arbiter to the kingly office of the territory, and is to be incessantly along with the king, or the lord of the territory, as law remembrancer to him, in order to judge rightly what shall be brought before [the court;] and his function as a judiciary of the whole kingdom within its boundaries; second, the judge of a cymwd, and to him pertains the holding of a court, and to keep a record of law, and to promulgate it; and the court of the cymwd is to take place where there shall arise any plaint or claim, and there the judge is to hold it, and hear pleadings: for the law says, it is best decided where it is seen; the third judge is a justice by privilege, an owner of land; and he is a man of the court in raith, and in the joint verdict of the court of a cymwd and cantrev, in Dyved, and Morganwg, and Gwent; for every efficient owner of land is a justice, according to the custom of those countries: and in judgment there ought to be not less than seven of such justices, and from that to the number of fifty men; and their judgment and their verdict is called the raith of court.

214. Three persons who are not to be invested with the judicial function: an inefficient person, as one that is deaf, or blind, or maimed, or leprous, or insane, or mute, or who has a natural impediment of speech; the second is an alltud, or an aillt before obtaining seizin; that is, before he shall attain innate privilege, or privilege of the ninth descent; and an aillt is not to obtain ascendancy over innate ccxv. Tri anghyviawnder barn a brawd: barnu ar na vytho ger bron llys yn clywed, ac nas gwyswyd yn warantedig mal y gallai amddifyn; ail, barnu ar a vo ger bron yn ngwrthrym cyvraith, gan vrenin, neu arglwydd y llys, neu gan vrawdwr llys, neu arall o wr llys, a wyrain gyvraith; trydydd, barnwr annosparthus, heb warant ar ei swydd; sev a'i gelwir ynad neu varnwr annheilwng: a lle ydd elo gyvryw varn ar nebun o Gymro cynnwynawl, rhydd iddo ei raith gwlad, yn nawdd a braint cyfraw ei bencenedl. Ac i vab aillt y bydd ei briodawr, ac i hwnw braint rhaith a ddylit i Gymro cynnwynawl, er diwygiaw cam ei wr o vab aillt. Ac i vab aillt yn mraint mamwys y bydd cyviawn nawdd pencenedl; canys iawn i bob Cymraes gynnwynawl nawdd ei phencenedl: ac os arglwydd priodawr mab aillt ei hunan a wna yn ngham ag ev, ac yn anghyvraith, nawdd arglwydd y cyvoeth iddo, neu y brenin: ac os gwr brenin, neu arglwydd cyvoeth, y bydd a wnelo ag ev yn ngham, nawdd brenin neu arglwydd cywlad iddo, ac i hwnw varnu herwydd cyvraith: ac nis dylit corn gwlad ar vab aillt yu fo.

ccxvi. O dri choll y bydd trais: colli dyn, colli tir, a cholli da cychwynawl: a lle dyco y brenin neu arglwydd cyvoeth un o'r tri, yn amgen nog a'i rhotho cyvraith, rhydd i a'u collo ei raith, a'r un a'u dyco a'u tal, ac a'u diwygia; a lle a'u dyco arall, hawl a ddylit yn nghyvraith ar a'i gwnelo.

natives; the third is, a man unlearned in the law and political sciences, or a layman who knows not the law and customs of a country and kindred, nor how to decide as to the privilege of land, nor as to the privilege of office, nor as to the accessaries of galanas, and other things in law, because he has not been regularly instructed; and the ignorant and unlearned are not to decide upon any thing whatever in law, be it what it may; since there cannot be expected in such either reason or sense, other than the result of natural passions, from which there cannot emanate conscientious justice.

215. Three injustices of judgment and decision: deciding upon such as shall not be present in the court to hear, and who has not been regularly summoned, so as to be able to defend himself; second, deciding upon what shall be before the court contrary to law, by the king, or the lord of the court, or by a justice of the court, or any other functionary of court, who might pervert the law; third, an unqualified decider, without authority for his office; and he is denominated an unworthy judge or decider: and in a case where a decision of that kind affects any innate Cymro, he has a right to his raith of country, agitated under the protection and privilege of his chief of kindred. And for an aillt there is his proprietary, with the privilege of a raith due to an innate Cymro, for redressing the wrong of his man, being an aillt. And for an aillt under the privilege of maternity there is the just protection of a chief of kindred; for every innate Cymraes has a right to the protection of her chief of kindred: and if the lord proprietary of an aillt himself do wrong towards him, and unlawfully, he is to have the protection of the lord of the territory, or of the king: and if a man of the king, or of a lord of territory, do wrong to him, he is to have the protection of the king or lord of a federate country, who is to judge according to law: and the horn of the country is not to follow an aillt in flight.

216. Three losses are accompanied by violence: loss of a person, loss of land, and loss of moveable property: and where the king or lord of a territory shall take either of the three, otherwise than the law shall allow him, such as shall lose them have a right to his raith, and the one who shall take them is to pay, and to redress it; and where another shall take them, he becomes amenable to an action at law.

217. Three losses whereon there can be no appraisement: meal; bees; and coined money: because there exists a complete ccxix. Tri chrair twng y sydd : brysyll golychwyddwr ; enw Duw ; a llaw yn llaw a dynger iddo : a llawgreiriau a'u gelwir. Tri thwng arall y sydd : nid amgen, gair ar gydwybod ; gair yn wyneb haul ; a chadarnau yn nawdd Duw a'i wirionedd. Gwedi hyny doded : y dengair deddv ; ac evengyl Ieuan ; a'r groes vendigaid.

resemblance to them ; and there can be no claim, except by testimony or acknowledgement, upon such as may take them by stealth.

218. Three persons are required to bind themselves by ■ pledge to the king, or lord of a territory, lest they do wrong, and for the safety of the country and people : on a plaint of fear of life and limb made by another through swearing upon the relic, or upon his conscience, under the protection of God and his truth, on account of a threat ; secondly, one who shall refuse lawful reparation for an injury he might have received ; and an intruder, who shall be longer than three days in a country, and shall tender no lawful submission to the lord of the territory, or to a breyr, and that lest he should do wrong, although there may be no complaint against him : a breyr is an innate land-owner, who is a chief of household having the privilege of a court justice.

219. There are three relics to swear by : the staff of a priest ; the name of God ; and hand-in-hand with the one sworn to : and these are called hand-relics. There are three other modes of swearing : to wit, averment upon conscience ; averment in the face of the sun ; and confirming under the protection of God and his truth. After that were introduced : the ten words of the law ; the gospel of John ; and the blessed cross.

220. Three things without which there cannot be a home : an established dwelling ; privilege of country and kindred ; and sustenance secured by social compact.

221. There are three persons privileged not to attend to the horn of country, nor to have hand on sword ; that is, they are not to engage in war : a bard ; an artist ; and a man of court ; for, neither one nor the other of the three can be dispensed with.

222. There are three weapons by law : a sword ; a spear ; and a bow with twelve arrows in a quiver : and every household man must keep them prepared to act against a border-country host and strangers, and others being men of depredation. And weapons are not allowed to other than an innate Cymro, or an aillt in the third descent, to guard against treachery and ambush.

223. Three titles of possession to land : primary tith, and continuing it without forbiddance unto the completion of the third tith ; a primary fire-back ; and a primary social right, that is, giving the first verdict in court, under the privilege attached to the possessor of that land as an

Sev y dywed llyvr arall yn hyn o vodd: tri argae tervyn: rhyw, sev yw hyny barlin o gysevin hawl, neu o gysevin genedl; braint, sev yw a rodded o rodd cenedl i wr, am a wnaeth drostynt ac erddynt; a gwarant, sev rhodd gwlad ac arglwydd yn ngorsedd, am a ddylai cyviaunder gan brid, neu i bedrorion alltudion, yn mraint mamwys, neu unrhyw beth arall, ba ryw hynag y barnawr gwarant llys a gorsedd. Sev a'i dywawd cyvraith Dyvnwal Moelmud; a goreu deddwr o genedl y Cymry ydoedd ev.

ccxxv. Tri chov cenedl y sydd: cov llys cyvraith; cov pencenedl ar ei saith henadur; a chov barddas: cov llys cyvraith a saiv ar yngnaid; cov pencenedl a saiv ar ei saith henadur, nid amgen no breiniau a dichweiniau eu cenedl, ac ar y saith henadur ei dreiglaw i'r pencenedl a vydd wedi yr un a vo marw; a chov barddas a saiv ar veirdd gwarantedig o athrawon, a braint gorsedd. Sev y gelwir y tri chov hyn, tri chov gwarantedig gwlad a chenedl; ac arnynt y mae gwarantu pob ach bonedd, a phob braint arvau; canys, o vrait tir y mae braint arvau; a lle cefir braint arvau yn warrantedig o gov ac arwydd, tyst vydd hyny y'mhob dadl tir a daiar.

ccxxvii. Tri marwdyst y sydd am dir: tystiolaeth etiveddion, hyd eu gorwyron, neu dra hyny, a gredir yn llys, am a glywsant gan eu rhieni a vu gynt, a'r rhai hyny a elwir gwybyddiaid cov a chydwybod; ail, henaduriaid gwlad a chenedl, am a wyddant innate Cymro, there being proof of that unto the extent of the circle of parentage; the parentage of a man includes his father, his grandfather, and his great grandfather; and thence unto the ninth degree and descent they are called "gerni."

224. There are three limitations of a meer: prior conservancy; privilege; and proprietary title. Another book describes it in this manner: three limitations of a meer: kind, which is supremacy from original claim, or of original kindred; privilege, or what is granted by gift of kindred to a man, for what he has done on their account and for them; and warrant, which is a gift of country and lord in session, for what is due in justice as a prid, or to alltuds in the fourth degree, under the privilege of maternity, or any other kind of thing, howsoever decided by warranty of court and session. So it is declared by the law of Dyvnwal Moelmud; and he was the best legislator of the kindred of the Cymry.

225. There are three records of a kindred: the record of a court of law; the record of a chief of kindred conjointly with his seven elders; and the record of bardism: the record of a court of law depends upon the judges; the record of a chief of kindred depends upon his seven elders, to wit, the privileges and events of their kindred, and the seven elders are to transfer it to the chief of kindred who succeeds the one who may die; and the record of bardism depends upon bards authorized as teachers, and by the privilege of session. These three records are called the three authenticated records of country and kindred; and upon them depends the authenticating of every degree of descent, and every privilege of arms; for, from the privilege of land originates the privilege of arms; and where the privilege of arms shall be found authenticated by record and symbol, that becomes a testimony in every suit as to land and soil.

226. Three guiding records of court: a record of agreement of two parties; a record of termination of a suit, if a pleader come to deny it on the one part, and to assert it on the other; and a record of illegality that a lord commits towards his man in his court.

227. There are three dead testimonies concerning land: testimony of heirs, as far as grandchildren, or beyond that, is credited in court, as to what they heard from their ancestors theretofore, and those are called evidences of memory and conparth ach ac edryd ; a thrydydd, pentanvaen tad y govynwr, neu un ei hendad, neu un ei orhendad, neu ereill o'i genedl, neu le adail ei rieni ar y tir ; a phrovi hyny wrth nod a gair cenedl a gwlad : yr hai hyn a savant yn lle tystiadon, lle nis gellir mwy o bwys ar a'u gwrthrym ac a'u gwrthair, o vyned gwrth-yn-ngwrth ger bron llys cyvraith, neu raith gwlad.

ccxxviii. ccxxx. Tri chov cyvarwyddydd : llyvr llys ; cerdd davawd, a gwybedydd o lin cerdd, sev bardd gwarantedig o athraw ; a chov gwybodau.

ccxxxii. Tri dyben addysg a chov : gwybyddu ; diwallu ; a dyddanu.

ccxxxiii. Tri anhebgor athraw o vardd : awen o Dduw ; addysg o athraw ; a'i swydd yn warrantedig o varn gorsedd.

ccxxxiv. Tri thlws trevgorodd : llyvr ; athraw o lin cerdd ; a gov geveiliawg.

science ; secondly, elders of country and kindred, as to what they know of kin and descent ; and thirdly, the fire-back stone of the father of the demandant, or the one of his grandfather, or the one of his great grandfather, or others of his kindred, or the house tost of his parents upon the land ; and that proved by the mark and word of kindred and country : those stand instead of witnesses, where there cannot be produced greater weight on behalf of such as oppose them and contradict them, on going contra-per-contra before a court of law, or raith of country.

228. There are three retainable customs : a custom that accords with law ; secondly, a custom that precedes law, consistent with equity, where it has authority by the decision of the king's court, from usage and practice beyond memory ; and is not to be in force but within the limits of the place where it is found warranted by usage ; thirdly, one that precedes law from natural circumstance, and which compels neither on behalf nor against, but extinguishes plaint and proceeding, and sanctioned by raith of country, not other than the oaths of fifty men, being elders of kindred ; and where it shall be so confirmed, nothing afterwards is to bar against it ; for then it is said, it is law, sanctioned by memorial and record of court.

229. For three causes a man forfeits his patrimony : warning a border-country of the intention of his lord and his kindred ; treason to a lord or judge ; and the killing of a person by stopping and waylaying him : and the life of each of the three is forfeited, and they cannot be redeemed ; and the kindred and progeny of each of the three are to be aillts, similar in condition to others who are aillts prior to obtaining privilege by maternity.

230. Three indispensables of law : privilege guaranteed by country and lord ; functionaries of court, or judges and justices ; and record of information.

231. Three records of information : the book of court ; vocal song, and an adept in the structure of song, or a bard authorized as a teacher ; and record of sciences.

232. Three ends of instruction and remembrance : to impart knowledge ; to satisfy ; and to entertain.

233. Three indispensables of a bard who is a teacher : genius from God ; instruction from a teacher ; and his function authorized by the judgment of a session.

234. Three ornaments of a hamlet : a book ; a teacher versed in song ; and a smith in his smithy.

ccxxxv. Tri anhebgor hendrev: tanwydd; dwr croyw; a bugail trevgordd.

ccxxxvi. Tri anhebgor havodwr: bwd; bugeilgi; a chyllell.

ccxxxvii. Tri anhebgor bwd havodwr: nenbren; nenfyrch; a bangor: a rhydd iddo eu tori yn nghoed gwyllt a vyno.

ccxxxviii. Tri phren nid rhydd eu tori heb genad gwlad ac arglwydd: mesbren, sev derwen; a bedwen; a rhavnwydden.

ccxxxix. Tri anhebgor boneddig cynnwynawl: brecan; telyn; a challawr: ac yn ddogned paladr iddo.

ccxl. Tri anhebgor taiawg: pentan; glaiv; a chavn: ac iddo o ddogned paladr.

ccxli. Tri pheth ni renir ag arall: cledd; cylllell; a brecan: sev a'u pieufont a'u ceidw o iawn cyvraith.

ccxlii. Tri arlludd tir: hawl yn llys; tor arad; a llosgi ty ar y tir.

ccxliii. Tri chadarn byd: arglwydd; ynvyd; a diddim.

ccxliv. Tri ni vyddant garddychwel ddir a gorrwod, sev nid iawn gyru swydd ar un o henynt: gwraig; bardd; ac annhiriog: sev nid iawn gyru ar un o henynt na swydd gwlad, na llaw ar gledd, ac ni vyddant wrth gorn a gwaedd gwlad: sev ar vardd y mae braint Duw a'i dangnev, a'i swydd wrth gerdd; ac nis dylit gwasanaethu dwy swydd; ac ar wraig y mae gwr, a braint arglwydd priodawr iddo erni; ac nid iawn dwyn oddiar arall ei briawd o ddyn nac o dda; ac ar annhiriog nis dylit gyru llaw ar gledd, achaws nid oes gantho dir iddei golli; ac nid iawn iddo golli bywyd ac aelawd tros arall, namyn gadael iddo ei serch a'i gynghyd; a lle ydd elo llaw ar gledd, brydd a'i gelwir; a braint brydd a ddylit iddo.

ccxlv. O dri pheth y cyll Cymro cynnwynawl dir ei dad, a braint ei geneall: cwbl gargychwyn i wlad estron; cwbl ymdanc a llu estron yn rhyvel a chenedl n Gymry; a chwbl ymrodd i lu estron gortrech, o vodd, lle y gallai ddianc.

235. Three indispensables of a permanent abode: fire-wood; pure water; and a hamlet herdsman.

236. Three indispensables of a summer resident: a bothy; a herdsman's dog; and a knife.

237. Three indispensables of the bothy of a summer resident: a roof-tree; roof-supporting forks; and wattling: and he is at liberty to cut them in any wild wood he pleases.

238. Three trees that it is not free to cut without the permission of the country and the lord: an acorn-tree, or oak; and a birch-tree; and a witch-elm.

239. Three indispensables of an innate boneddig: a plaid; a harp; and a boiler: and his spear allowance.

240. Three indispensables of a taeog: a fire-back; a glaive; and a trough: and his spear allowance.

241. Three things that are not shared with another: a sword; a knife; and a plaid: those who own them keep them by right of law.

242. Three bars as to land: a suit in court; a breaking of a plough; and the burning of a house on the land.

243. Three mighties of the world: a lord; an idiot; and a nonentity.

244. Three that are not car-removable by compulsion and necessity, upon whom it is not right to impose office: a woman; a bard; and one having no land: for it is not right to impose upon them office of country, or hand upon sword, and they are not to attend to the horn of the country: the bard is devoted by privilege to God and his peace, his office being the cultivation of song; and two offices ought not to be served; and over a woman there is a husband, with the privilege of proprietary lord over her; and it is not right to take from another his appropriation either of person or of property; and one without land ought not to be compelled to have hand upon sword, because he has no land to lose; and it is not right that he should lose life or limb on account of another, but that he should be left to his pleasure and purpose; and where he shall lay hand upon sword, he is called a volunteer; and he becomes entitled to the privilege of a volunteer.

245. By three things an innate Cymro loses his patrimony, and the privilege of his kindred: complete car-removal to a strange country; complete confederacy with a strange host at war with the kindred of the Cymry; and complete resignation to an oppressing host of strangers, and that wittingly, where he might have escaped.

CCXLVI. O dri pheth ydd ennill Cymro vrait ei genedl, a'i dir yn rhydd, gwedi a'i collo: cwbl garddychwel o wlad estron; cwbl gargoll dros Gymru a Chymro; a chwbl ymwrthvyn a llu estron gortrech, lle gallasai vrait a thiroedd y ganddynt yn warantedig, o ymgyvladd ag wynt.

CCXLVII. Tri charychwyn heb attychwel y sydd: gwraig briawd, sev ydd aeth ei braint oddiwrth ei chenedl, ac yn nghenedl ei gwr priodawr, a hyny yn mraint a bodd cyvraith, ac ni ddylai ddychwelyd drachevn yn mraint ei chenedl hi: sev ni adwna cyvraith a wnelo unwaith yn ngwybod: trevtadawg, wedi bod yn hir yn alltudedd yn ngwlad estron, a dychwelyd wedi hyny iddei wlad ei hun, a chafael ei dir; od a ev eilwaith yn ddilys yn alltudedd, nid ymchwel drachevn o iawnder; ac, o gwna, ni roddir iddo drev ei dad; yr arglwydd cyvoeth a'i piau yn ngwarchadw, yny wypo pwy arall o'r genedl a'i dyly, ac yna ei roddi i hwnw: a chyswynvab, a gymmerer, neu a water, gan y genedl, pa un bynag a wnelawr ni ddylit ei adwneuthur; sev yw cyswynvab, mab i arall, neu vab llwyn a pherth, a gymerawr yn gyvreithawl, er cael mab o etivedd.

CCXLVIII. Tair llys gwlad a chyvraith amryval eu cynnal, parth gorddawd ac ansawdd gwyr llys a'i swyddwyr: un Bowys; un Gaerllion ar Wysg, sev un Morganwg a Deheubarth; ac un Gwynedd: cisioes, yr un cyf cymmrawd y sydd ar y tair gwlad hyny; nid amgen, gorsedd dygynnull gwlad a chywlad yn rhaith; ac yn amgen o vodd nid rhydd gwneuthur cyvreithau yn Nghymru; sev nid braint, a iawn cyvraith a chymmrawd, i un neu arall o'r gwledydd wneuthur cyvraith namyn yn nghyswyn y rhai ereill. Sev yw arver Powys, maer, canghellawr, un brawdwr, o ynad swydd, ofeiriad i ysgrivenu dadleuoedd, a rhingyll: ac yn hono nid oes amgen o wyr llys a swyddau, herwydd arver cyn cov a chlyw y wlad a'r genedl, yn Mhowys. Llys gwlad a chyvraith yn Ngwynedd a vydd yn hyn o vodd; nid amgen, arglwydd y cwmwd, oni bydd yno y tywysawg ei hunan, maer, canghellawr, un ynad swydd, ofeiriad Clynog, neu un Bangor, neu un Penmon, i ysgrivenu dadleuoedd, a rhingyll. Llys Deheubarth, sev hono cysevin llys Caerllion

LAWs, II.

246. By three things a Cymro regains the privilege of his kindred, and his land free, after he shall have lost them: complete car-returning from a strange country; complete car-loss for Cymru and Cymro; and complete self-withholding from an oppressing host of strangers, where he might have obtained privilege and lands securely from them, by coinciding with them.

247. There are three car-departures without return: a married woman, as her privilege has gone from her kindred, and become merged in that of the kindred of her proprietary husband, and that consonant to the privilege and dictate of law, and she is not to return to the privilege of her own kindred: as the law will not undo what once it has knowingly done: one possessed of patrimony, after having been long in a state of alienism in a strange country, and afterwards returning to his own country, and obtaining his land; if he go a second time unquestionably into a state of alienism, he returns not again by right; and, if he do, his patrimony is not to be given to him; the lord of the territory has possession of it in conservancy, until it shall be known what other individual of the kindred has a right to it, and then it is to be given to that one: and a reputed son, that shall be received, or that shall be rejected, by the kindred, whichever shall be done, it ought not to be undone; a reputed son is the son of any one, or a son of bush and brake, that shall be lawfully received for obtaining a son to be an heir.

248. Three courts of country and law variously constituted, in respect to the power and description of the men of the court and its officers: one of Powys; one of Caerllion upon Usk, or the one of Glamorgan and South Wales; and one of Gwynedd: nevertheless, the same body of social jurisprudence extends over those three countries; to wit, conventional session of country and federate country in raith; and in no other manner is it permitted to make laws in Cymru; for there is no privilege, by right of law and social jurisprudence, for the one or the other of the countries to make a law but in connexion with the rest. The usage of Powys is, a maer, a canghellor, one judge, as a judge of office, a priest to write the pleadings, and an apparitor: and there are no other men of court and offices, according to usage beyond memory and hearing of the country and kindred, in Powys. Court of country and law in Gwynedd is constituted in this manner; to wit, the lord of the cwmwd, unless the prince be there himself, a maer, a canghellor, one judge by office, the priest of Clynog, or the one of Bangor, or the one of Penmon, to write pleadings, and an apparitor. The court of South Wales, or that which was originally the court of Caerllion upon Usk; the prince, or the king, and in his stead, when he is not there, the lord of the cantrev, or the cymwd, and along with him a maer, a canghellor, ■ clerk of court, to write the pleas and record of court, and an apparitor, and several justices or judges. Every landowner, being a lawful chief of household, is a justice or judge in South Wales, Morganwg, and Gwent; and the number of justices from seven to fourteen, and thence to twenty-one, and thence to fifty men; and their judgment is called raith of court. In Powys and Gwynedd there is one judge by office; and in the countries of South Wales; to wit, Ceredigion, Dyved, Morganwg, and Gwent, there are several justices by privilege; that is, by privilege of land and household; and there a justice, or judge by office, is not required; for the justices are chosen by the silent raith of the elders and chief of kindred. It is said that, in South Wales, a court can be composed of these three; to wit, the king, or the lord of the cymwd in his stead, a canghellor being a clerk, and several justices; and one or other of the justices executes the office of apparitor in the court, or the canghellor executes it.

And thus terminate the triads of Dyvnwal Moelmud, which are called triads of community and federate community. And every annalist and genealogist that would become acquainted with the privileges and customs of the country and kindred of the Cymry collectively; and the privilege of descent, and its nature by equity; and the privilege of arms, in respect to descent and territorial divisions; and the privilege and lack of privilege of aillts; such ought to know these triads, before he can of right have an authorized degree of vocal song, in session, according to the privilege and custom of the bards of the old Cymry.

And I Thomas, son of Evan, of Trev Bryn in Morganwg, transcribed this from the old books of Sir Edward Mansell of Margam, when the year of Christ our Lord was 1685.

[ELUCIDATION.

I. AM ARDELW.]

I. OF ARDELW.]

I. Tri ofer braw y sydd a gynnig dyn ac ni wrandewir o gyfreith: praw a gynycio hawlwr i wiriaw y hawl wedy ateb or amddiffynwr iddi; eil yw praw a gynycio amddiffynwr wedy ateb y hawl a chau yn y dadyll; trydydd praw ar na wnaethbwyd peth y bo ymhawl amdanaw: canys anawdd yw profi y fi y peth ni bu; cany bu y peth ni wnaethbwyd etton; eissioes ef a ellir profi negyfaeth lle bo.

1. There are three futile proofs, which a person may offer, and are not, by law, listened to: a proof that a claimant shall offer to verify his claim, after the defendant has answered it; the second is, a proof that a defendant shall offer, after having answered to a claim, and the suit closed; thirdly, a proof that a thing has not been done, concerning which there shall be proceedings instituted: because it is difficult to prove a thing to be, that has not been; since the thing that has not been, has not yet existed; nevertheless a negation can be proved, where it shall not exist.

II. Tri pheth ni chyngain ynghyfreith praw ar weithred eithyr y teir hynn; a gwad dros wassaf sef yw hynny gwadu hynn a elwit arddelw am danaw gynt; a chof wedi brawt; ac obry y ceffi, lle mae dewedylf am frawr beth yw cof wedy brawd.

2. Three things which accord not in law: proof of an act, except in three cases; denial as to a gwaesav, which is, denying that for which an arddelw has been previously called; and remembrance after judgment; and above thou wilt find, where judgment is spoken of, what is implied by remembrance after judgment.

III. Tri rhyw waessaf cyfreithiawl y sydd: arddelw; ac arwayssaf; a gwarant am beth digyfodic ac amddiffyn heb warant.

3. There are three kinds of legal gwaesavs: an arddelw; an arwaesav; and a warrant for immoveable property; or defence without a warrant.

IV. Tri rhyw arddelw y sydd: arddelw o berchenogaeth da; ail yw a gymero da o law amddiffynnwr, ai ollwng yntau yn rhydd; trydydd ardelu cyfreithiawl fal na ddylyer ateb y hawl.

4. There are three kinds of arddelws: an arddelw of the ownership of property; the second is, one that shall take property out of the hand of a defendant, and set him free; thirdly, a lawful arddelw, so as not to be required to answer a claim.

V. Deu ryw arddelw am dda sydd o berchenogaeth: un am da byw hwnnw a berthyn y arddelw oi eni ni feithrin ac nad aeth deirnos y ar y warchadw ai berchenogaeth. Pam y dywedir hynny? O bydd deirnos yn ddiarddelw mewn yna y ddylyir manegi ir arglwydd y da ni chyll y dyn y dda er henny eythyr y ddamdwng yn y law ef, ac ni bydd arnaw ef am gynnal er hynny.

5. There are two kinds of arddelw for the ownership of property: one is for live property, which requires an arddelw of birth and rearing, and that it had not been three nights from his custody and ownership. Why is that said? If it be three nights without arddelw [in another's hand,] then the lord is to be informed of it; the person does not, therefore, lose his property, but is to swear to it in the other's hand, although he is not thereby to uphold it.

VI. Arddelw perchenogaeth o dda marw hwnnw a berthyn y gadw ganthaw cyn y golli oll wna ef, a hwnnw hefyd a ddylyir arddelw nad aeth deirnos; ac ni ddylyir gwadu gyd ac arddelw, namyn dywedyd bod iddaw geidweid a gadwo y dda ganthaw; sef yw yr arddelw hwnn diarffor i ymoglyd rhac yr hawl ac arfer o bell gwell iddaw.

6. The ownership of dead property requires an arddelw of custody before loss, and, likewise, that it had not been from his custody three nights; and denial is not needed together with an arddelw, only saying, that he has guardians that the property is his; which arddelw is a way to obviate the claim, and use [other means hereafter] which may be better for him.

VII. Arddelw a gymero peth o law dyn, a ddisgin o lawer sef yw hwnnw dywedyd y fennygyaw o hwnn a hwnn; neu y rodidi yn adneu attaw; neu y gyfnewidiaw ac ef; neu y wystlaw iddaw; neu warchau anifail yn gyfreithiawl; a gwadu lledrad ac anghyfreith: ac nid cwbl addef, ac nid cwbl wad cythyr y haddef oll, neu y gwadu oll. Eissioes addef a berthyn yma dygod y da attaw ac eissioes yn gyfreithiawl.

VIII. Arddelw arall: dywedyd nad cyfreithiawl y cwyn neu yr hawl ac na ddylir ateb iddi; sef yw hynny gorsaf cyfreithiawl y beri yr hawl sefyll, sef yw hynny nad cyfreithiawl yr hawl nar cwyn, ac na ddylir ateb y gwyn anghyfreithiawl; ac nyd gwad hynny ac nyd addef yr hawl. Ai dywedyd na ddyleir ateb y ryw ar hawlwr a gyrry amraint arnaw; neu ddewedyd na dyly y rhyw ddyn ar amdiffynnwr ateb yr hawl nac i un hawl; a dywedyd y fod yn farn goll ac na ddily ateb y hawl ddybryd o byd fell; ac nyd arddelw cyfreithiawl yw . . . honno, namyn arddelw yn torri ac yn llesteir cyfreith cyn dylyir y cymryd canyt o cyfreith urdeu na nawdd sant; na chymyn na chred na phriodas, na diddymrwydd o ddyn y dda pan arddelwo un or rhei hynny canys ymwadu a chyfreith y mae nad ctyb yr arddelw cyfreithiawl a hwnnw ar alw a digawn bod o gyfraith yn a ddelw drostaw na ddily ay am cau o gyfreith rhwng y dyn ay hawl; ac na ddilyo ateb lle cayo cyfreith.

7. An arddelw, who shall take a thing from a person's hand, may use many pleas: saying, that he borrowed it from so and so; or that it was placed as a deposit with him; or that it was matter of exchange; or pledged with him; or a legally impounded animal; and denying theft and illegality: and confession and denial are not complete, without either confessing or denying the whole. In this case confession is appropriate; that the property was in his hands, but, nevertheless, legally so.

8. Another arddelw: saying that neither the plaint nor the claim is legal, and is not to be answered; that is a legal bar to arrest the claim, that, neither the claim nor plaint being legal, an illegal plaint is not to be answered; and that is not a denial, nor confession, of the claim. As saying, that such a person as the claimant is not to be answered, and charging him with want of privilege; or saying, that such a person as the defendant is not to answer that claim, or any claim; and saying, that it is a void judgment, and that a wrong claim is not to be answered, if it be so; and that is not a lawful arddelw, but one that breaks and impedes law, although it is to be accepted; for, by law, [if a person be in] holy orders, or sanctuary of a saint; or by will, or vow, or marriage, or destitution, [become himself divested of property;] when he shall make use of such arddelw, he shuns law [by not producing] a lawful arddelw; and, thus, as he does not produce his arddelw, but calls persons to prove this, the law closes between the person and his claim; and he is not to answer where the law shall close.

9. [An arddelw is to be produced] for every moveable property [which may be] claimed, [and the claim abandoned.

10. An arddelw] is not to be in a suit of surety and debtor, or briduw the plaint is neither timely, nor legal, to answer as a plaint for saraad, unless at this time, or for galanas, unless lawful, and at the legal periods to avenge a murder or saying, that the plaint was not followed up legally in the court; [or that it did not amount] to the teithi of violence, where they occur; or that the suit was not legally prosecuted; or [prosecuted] for the sake of the property, where that occurs; or that he did not promise timely proof, before closing the suit; or promising proof, where prosecution, or swearing, was appropriate; or swearing, where prosecution, or proof, was appropriate; or proof, or swearing, was appropriate; or

[urging a lack] of skill to describe and to follow up a claim [legally;] or saying a faulty word in the court, and refusing three times to amend it; for a faulty word, in a suit for land, is not fatal until it occurs three times, or closes the law [in that case;] if it be claimed in any of the ways that closes the law between a person and his due, as an illegal plaint, or one of which the prosecutor is not the real party; or [one in which] there is to be no barrator; or that there was no legal summons to answer the suit; or that the kind of property, or land, or trev, or quantity lost, was not specified; or the way in which the person lost his property, of the various ways [in which it might occur;] or what time the claim may be, whether on the blank days, or on a Sunday; or noticing at what time of day the parties are arranged in law; or that the claimant has not all his essentials on the day of decision; or that he sues a second time, after previous decision, or settlement; or that he states not the extent of his claim; for there is to be an extent to every claim; or that the defendant, or claimant, be not named by his baptismal name; or observing whether there be one, or two, or three claimants; for there is no law between claimants and a defendant, nor between defendants and a claimant, only between a claimant and a defendant; or noticing the claimant's [possession,] and he suing; or whether there be a surety, or briduw, [in the cause;] for if there be, the plaint is wrong; or whether it be a plaint for property before the time for payment; or whether the plaint has been altered; or whether a greater extent be mentioned than the claim in the plaint; [or whether] there be a guarantor without defence, that is, a guardian without an arddelw; and that is a legal bar to arrest the suit.

As when a person shall prosecute another: that he had permission to move the thing; or the defendant insisting that the claimant gave him the thing which he is claiming or avouching; or [that the thing was] pledged to him; and that for the truth of this he has enow that know it. [As these are] not lawful arddelws; the law says, [that by these] the decision is placed in the hands of another, such [as a guardian,] or contract-man, or witness, or evidence, or gorvodog, [or surety,] or arwaessaf, to take the misdeed from the hand of the person; all those [are guardians,] who cannot be foiled but by being put to the relics; or succeed [but by being] steadfast to the one who calls [them.] Some of these may fail, [as an arwaessaf] that is, an arddelw, and it is not necessary to summon him, or a guardian, or an evidence.

2. Every arddelw, however, for a thing as being given, or paid, for which a prosecution is instituted, or permission had to remove it, or to pledge it, can be proved through evidences, if the thing be denied; for no one can be an arwaessaf but the one named as an arwaessaf, where an arwaessaf is named.

3. The second is, an arwaessaf; that is, where a person shall give his arwaessaf to exonerate his guest from wrong; that is, as to night theft, and absence, and ferocious or horrid deeds; although an arwaessaf can likewise be called for theft in hand.

4. The third is, a warrant as to immovable property; that is for unremoved property, or labour, or a thing unseen which may be [injurious,] or for ground-breach, or arature; let him say he has a warrant, and naming his warrant.

5. Three cases where the law bars a person from his arddelw: one is, where a person shall declare his arddelw for property in hand to be another man, and such one not being in the field, he is not to have time but to [produce him]; secondly, where a person shall give his arddelw by producing another, who cannot answer to a claim; thirdly, where a person shall give his arddelw for a thing, where he ought to have evidences, [by producing guardians,] or guardians where evidences, or a raith should be.

6. Three things which a faultless guarantor is to do in court: to reply without delay, without reserve, for himself, and for the defendant, and for the property in dispute; the second is, to stand to the law in the suit, as to what shall pertain to him, through the verdict of a judge; thirdly, to do all for himself, and for the defendant, which a judge shall order [as] above, [or give a] lawful arddelw that he ought not to answer.

7. There is no denial to an arddelw, because [he must make a] defence.

8. An arwaessaf can effect no denial, but birth and rearing, or custody before loss, or arddelw.

9. There is no time for a present arwaessaf, but [to answer upon summons.]

10. There is no time for an absent arwaessaf.

III. [TRIOEDD.]

i. Tri cymeinioc cyllid: amobyr; ebediw a gobyr estyn: fal y y bydd pob un lle taler.

III. [TRIADS.]

1. There are three cocquivalent gelds: amobyr; ebediw; and investiture fee: as [one may be,] so every one is, where it shall be paid.

2. Three persons who pay ebediw, without land: a boy under the age of fourteen years, for then he is to enter upon his own property, and is to be taxed; an innate boneddig; and a man who has received a donative.

3. Three persons whom their lord taxes, without having land in their possession: a boy of the age of fourteen years, when he goes to war; a man who shall pay land, as blood-land, let him pay geld for it; and the giver away of a daughter, let him pay her amobyr, although he may have no land.

4. Three cases wherein evidences extinguish a raith: where competent information shall be had as to theft; where deposing to a summons; and as to a deposit: for they cannot be denied against proof, through a raith.

5. Three deeds not to be compensated: killing fish; killing an otter; and killing a cur with a weapon in hand in self defence.

6. Three things by which a hearth may be re-uncovered: a hearth-stone; a horse-block; and the fire-slab of a kiln: the worth of each of these by law

7. Three occurrences of uncontrollable fire are paid: the first house that shall take fire; and the second; and third: if there be a space between them, the fire is a ravager, and, by law, no compensation is to be made.

8. Three persons whom the law does not adjudge to take an oath: a pleader, on behalf of whom he may stand; and a child under age, or a youth; and an arddelw, excepting where a guardian is an arddelw; then he is to swear in the outset.

9. There are three kinds of oath in [law:] a single oath in the first instance, where there may be no proceeding; a threefold oath in succession, where there shall be lawful proceeding; and an oath that is made alternately.

10. Three cases where there is once swearing: where a person shall promise an evidence, he swears only once before him; and a defendant before a guardian; and a defendant before his raith: this is in respect to a defendant.

11. Three cases where there is threefold swearing in succession: where appraisement is required, it is needful to swear three times; secondly, where a person shall proceed by plaint against another of murder, or theft, or any similar thing; thirdly,

12. Three cases where there is swearing alternately : as to a surety ; as to bridew ; and a contract-man : the claimant first swears to his being a surety, then the other swears that he is not ; then the first swears he is ; and so in that manner alternately.

13. There are three kinds of oath : confirming truth by swearing through and through ; the second is, denying falsehood by swearing through and through ; the third is, swearing as to a doubtful thing according to conscience, which may not be known to a certainty, whether it be true or false ; and that is a suppositive oath.

14. Three things which co-proprietors of land are not to divide : an oak copse ; a turbary ; and a stone quarry.

15. Three sons who are not to have the privileged tyddyn, notwithstanding their being the youngest : a son of the king of Aberffraw, because the eldest is to have it ; the son of a woman, when he shall acquire land by maternity ; and a son who shall be placed on fosterage with an aillt, by consent of the lord ; although he shall have land, he is not to have the tyddyn.

16. Three furs which the queen is entitled to : the skin of a marten ; of a beaver ; and an ermine.

17. Three things which it is necessary to deny, when saraad shall be denied : disgrace, or saraad ; assault, or attack ; and blood, or wound ; either to the party, or to his lord, or to his kindred.

18. Three saraads which are not to be augmented : saraad to a king, for violating his protection, or killing his messenger ; saraad that shall be paid for killing a person ; and saraad of an alltud.

19. The three exclusives of a man when he shall separate from his wife : his horse, with the whole of his arms ; the tunc of his land, to enable him to join the army, which he is not to share with any one ; the third is, his wyneb-werth, which comes to him, on account of her permitting another to be connected with her : she is not to have a share of these when they separate.

20. The three exclusives of a woman, when she shall separate from her husband, the three primaries : her cowyll ; her wyneb-werth, on account of her husband's being connected with another woman, to her dishonour ; and her saraad, if her husband beat her, and she innocent : and this is a wrong punishment, by law.

amends for squabbling with him; the second is, the breaking of an agreement between two disputants, where law is left between them; the third is, a person squabbling with another, in the lord's court, after protection shall have been announced in any of the three principal festivals.

22. Three persons to whom a tongue-wound is paid: a judge, while meditating as to his decision, on his judgment seat; and a priest in his surplice, while reading books, on high festivals; and the third is, to the lord, being present: that is, there shall be paid to them wyneb-werth, that is, saraad without augmentation: to the lord belongs the spoil of such as do so.

23. Three persons to whom a tenth is assigned: to the ministers of Christ their tithe; and a judge has the tenth penny from what he shall pass judgment upon, saving, where it is excepted, when a person shall swear to his property; and an informer has information fee, which is the tenth penny of the value of the thing discovered by him: a judge shall not have the tenth for land; nor for theft, nor of the worth of a corpse, nor from fighting, but twenty-four pence.

24. There are three lawful disturbances: killing of a person upon the land in contention, if killed in any other place but there, it is not lawful; burning a building upon the land; and breaking of a plough upon that land: the injury is, to provoke a suit for moveable property in the same country with the party daring to do it, and before the end of a year and a day; and, unless so done, it is not listened to; except in a suit of surety, or briduw.

25. Three times a woman has her wynebwerth, to wit, when she shall get the three primaries: the wynebwerth of every one is his saraad, without augmentation: her wynebwerth, the first time she shall find a woman with her husband, is six score pence from her husband; the second time, a pound; the third [time,] she can separate from him, if she will.

26. The three holds of a wife: when first slept with, she is not to go from thence until the end of the ninth night to become accustomed to her husband; and when she shall separate from her husband, she is not to move from the house until the end of the ninth day, and then after all her property; and when her husband shall die, she is not to go from the house until the end of the ninth day, and then go, unless she avouches of being pregnant; she is there to have time, through her arddelw, by giving surety for [thrice] nine score pence if her arddelw fail her, which is, assurance of pregnancy.

27. Three friendly enemies of a person: fire; water; and a lord: because a lord executes one brother, and avenges the other; secondly, fire burns one brother, and protects the other against starvation and cold; thirdly, water drowns one brother, and protects the other from thirst, or by other means.

28. Three women, from whom their husbands are not to have right for their adultery, if they commit it: one is, a woman seduced; although she may commit with another man what may be agreeable to her, she is not to do right to the man who seduced her, unless she had her agweddi when she went away from him: the second is, a woman openly slept with as a concubine; although such may do an act with another man, the first man who slept with her is not to have any right: the third is, a woman of bush and brake; her paramour is not to have any right from her, although she may commit incontinence, by taking another person. If the first man, of whom we have spoken above, be minded to abandon such kind of woman, on account of fornication, she is not to have any right from the man, when he goes away; and neither is the second man.

29. Three things which the youngest son is to have, in preference to his brothers, besides the privileged tyddyn, and the buildings between which wind does not pass: one is, a harp; a second is, a throw-board; a third is, a coulter.

30. Three acknowledged surreptions, for which no amends are due: taking a mare, to be enabled to catch her colt that is doing damage to corn; and taking a horse, or mare, to warn a country of an inroad, and of the host of a border-country; and taking a horse, or mare, to procure a priest for a person in danger, or a mediciner, lest he be lost without the sacrament, or for want of a mediciner.

31. Three cows which the king is to have: a cow which the canghellor shall take, by distress for the king's gwestva; a cow which shall be found with a person, [over and above] his share of the spoil of a border-country; and a cow for the army, and a cow for the feast of St. Mor.

32. Three works for which, while the smith is making them, if they become brule, that is alight, he is to have wynebwerth: the blade of a coulter; the socket of an ax; and the rim of a cauldron: and these three works the smith of the court is not to do gratuitously: the head of a spear; the blade of a coulter; and the rim of a cauldron.

IV. [OF THE COURT.]

1. Three rightful vicegerents are to rule all Cymru in its bounds: the king of Aberffraw; the lord of Dinefwr; and he of Mathrafal.

2. There are three chief palaces to these three princes, and privileged residences to them: one is, Aberffraw in Gwynedd; Dinefwr in the South; Mathrafal in *Gwynva in Powys: and so their kingdom was disposed into three parts: to one belongs the supremacy over the two, to wit, Aberffraw.

3. There are three earls under it: the earl of Caerllion; the earl of Dinefwr, and the earl of Mathrafal.

4. The South is in three parts: ^bReinwg, that is, the country of Rein; and Riellwg; and Morgannwg. Maeldaf the elder, son of Ynwch with one garment, caused his grandson Maelgwn Gwynedd to have the supreme privilege: although there are more cantreys in the South, the privilege of Gwynedd is the highest. The chief canghellor-trev in Cymru is Penardd in Arvon, which belonged to Maeldaf.

5. Three vicegerent dues arise from all Cymru: to Aberffraw from the other two; first, from Dinefwr four tuns of honey, each containing four 'mus,' two 'grenaid's in each mu, each 'gren' a load for two men on a pole: flour from Gwynva in the same manner.

6. Three score and three pounds the king of Aberffraw should pay to the king of Lloegyr; then he was called the king of London, for there were many kings formerly in Lloegyr: he should pay that as investiture fee when he might take investiture of his privilege.

7. Three things which are necessary for the support of the kingdom: a lord; arms; and law: a lord, to maintain law; law, to maintain peace; arms, to maintain war, and to restrain such as shall reject peace.

bard, who shall know what is to come in future, from the lore of Taliesin.

20. There are three persons in the court whose horns are of the same value with that of the king : the edling ; the chief of the household ; and the chief huntsman : because, when they die, the king is to have them all.

21. Three officers who are not to have woollen clothing, and [are not among the twenty-four, but are] officers by grant of the court : to wit, the [fuel man ; the porter ; and the] washerwoman : they have likewise no free land.

22. Three saraads of which the king is to have a share : that of the queen ; that of the priest of the household ; and the saraad of a corpse : two parts of the two first, and the third of the last : and, therefore, it is said, that the king is to have the third of the saraads, like the third of the galanases.

23. Three persons who are of superior privilege while sitting than while standing : a judge upon his judgment seat, if insulted by tongue-wound ; a chief of song, that is, a bard that shall have gained a chair, and who knows the prophetic song of Taliesin, and the worth of every poetical composition ; and a foot-holder, whose privilege is to sit under the foot of the king, and it is there his protection is availing.

24. Three persons who are of superior privilege while standing, than while sitting : an apparitor, since he ought not to sit in the court ; a doorkeeper of the hall ; and a court silentiary.

25. Three things conjointly is the measure of a mess : the fill of a hollow dish ; and a hornful of the three liquors mixed.

V. [OF LOSING PROPERTY.]

1. By three ways a person's property is separated from him : one is, lawfully with his consent ; a second is, lawfully without his consent, that is, by judgment, and to his sorrow, as it is to every one ; the third is, unlawfully without his consent.

2. Three modes which imply consent : by a person's refusing it without compulsion ; or by giving the property willingly to another ; thirdly, by suffering another to remove the property without impediment, without threat, without question.

3. Three ways of giving : one is, to give a thing into a person's hand in the presence of witnesses, and its removal by the person ; the second is, to give specified property to another through indemnity, or through surety, for one witness is of force in an indemnity, for indemnity is not the oath of many, nor is it stronger by being doubled ; the third is, to give a thing into the hand of another in the presence of a witness, and then recal it, after its removal by the person over an erw or two.

4. Three gifts which cannot be recalled by law, as being so inseparably given : one is, land given on a lawful day by a lord to a person, which no one that succeeds him can take from him by law ; secondly, a woman given by kindred to a man by gift and investiture, who cannot be taken from the man against his will ; [thirdly, a gift] given to a person in the presence of witnesses, and removed by the person, which cannot be recalled unless the witnesses fail.

5. Three ways by which a person's property is unlawfully separated from him, and the ownership is not : deposit ; lending ; and borrowing : that property can be questioned [by any one, but he does not lose] the ownership nevertheless.

6. Three ways by which a person's property is lawfully separated from him with his consent, and from his ownership : gift ; bargain ; and loan : those cannot be reclaimed, neither the thing given, or sold ; nor what is lent, but a return of the same kind.

7. Three ways by which a person's property is lawfully separated from him without his consent, and he does not lose the ownership : impounding ; pledging ; and judgment of law : unless they be freed at a legal period.

8. Three ways by which a person's property is unlawfully separated from him and against his consent, and from his ownership : violence ; theft ; and surreption.

9. Three ways by which a person's property is unlawfully separated from him without his consent for a space, and he loses not the ownership, except in one instance : loss by negligence ; illegal removal ; and tables ; by this, however, a man is unlawfully separated from his property and ownership, for the game is not right ; nevertheless, if there be witnesses to the tables it cannot be reclaimed, according to the kind of tables, whether casting the highest, or the like. Tables are more like an illegal than a legal thing ; nevertheless, it is the person's will either to take it as lawful or unlawful : for a man's degradation by his own will is no illegality to him.

10. Three ways by which a person's property is unlawfully separated from him without his consent, and he loses not his ownership but in two : that is, death ; damage ; and unintention : what shall die, or is killed by a person, or damaged, cannot be ever recovered however claimed ; therefore, legal worth was instituted upon what might die by the act of man, and, as the thing cannot be recovered, its worth is paid. For such there are three legal ways: to deny the killing; or payment of the worth of the property as the law decides, or by the appraisal of the owner himself; or return of similar property to the owner if it be time for so doing, as for a clean animal, when there is a separate worth for the life and for the flesh.

VI. [OF ANIMALS.]

1. Three things which are subject to death of which men make use: an animal; a vermin; and a bird.

2. There are three kinds of animals: a beast; a dog; and a bird: here is the sign that a bird is an animal, for the law says, that there are three one-footed animals: a horse; a hobby; and a covert-hound.

3. [There are the same kinds of distinction between animals as] between human kindred: as a horse and a mare; [a bull, cow,] and ox; a goat; a sheep; a tame sow, a wild sow; a hart [and a hind;] and roedeer male and female: a bondman [is the same as] an animal to claim his worth if killed; [no one claims for] a boneddig but a kindred, unless [he be a youth under the command of his father;] but he is not under his father's command after [fourteen years of age,] for no person has a property in another, [so as to] claim for him when killed, and to take the galanas among them, [but the kindred according to the privilege of his birth;] and some species of dogs are of higher rank than others; and some birds than others.

4. There are three higher species of dogs: a tracker; a greyhound; and a spaniel.

5. [There are three kinds of trackers: a blood hound;] a covert-hound; and a harrier.

6. There are three kinds of curs: [a mastiff;] a shepherd dog; and a house cur.

7. There are three kinds of vermin in law: a marten; a beaver; and an ermine: [they are cognizable] in law for their skins, [with which the] queen's robes [are adorned,] wherever [they may be killed. The skin of] the spattletail, or beaver, is a species of brown fur; [and from] its testicles a medicament can be prepared against the stone: [and it is said,] that when hunted it is aware that it is on account of his testicles, wherefore it pulls them off itself and casts them [away, whereby a wound is occasioned] which breeds worms, [and by degrees] causes his destruction.

As the death of things, to the injury of the owner, by hand, or foot, or tooth, or edge of sharp weapon, has been treated of: here by what way injury is done by hand, or foot, to fields, or an animal, or by dispersing or breaking vessels, or weapon, or lawful thing; which, whoever does, let him pay the legal worth to the owner; [and so likewise when corn damage occurs, by which] the crop is injured; and cutting an animal's foot, or other thing, [by which] the corn damage was occasioned; [for in such cases there are] three remedies: catching on the corn and impounding, and then [receiving payment for] the beasts; releasing the beast; or claiming through [law. And if they be injured,] it is one of the cases where a defendant becomes a claimant; because he is one of the three persons who are to compel [reparation.]

2. Three swine, by law, of the same worth upon corn [when caught: the herd boar; the sow for the lord; [and the principal one of the swine.]

3. Three animals for which neither money, nor corn, is to be taken for their trespass: a lamb; a kid; and [a hen:] it is not lawful to take but a hen's egg for each, [until they become subject to the same law as their dams.]

4. Three kinds of animals which arrive first [to the same] law as their dams for corn damage: a pig; a colt; and a lamb: a colt becomes so on the fourteenth day after its birth; a pig when it can turn up the cow-dung; a lamb, or kid, becomes so in August.

5. Three modes by which animals are released from impounding: by money; or eggs; or by payment of an animal for the damage.

6. Three modes by which beasts are released by money from impounding: one is, if impounded in the day by paying money for the damage; if beasts be found in the night on corn, a payment of double the amount to that if found during the day; the third mode is, at whatever time beasts be found, whether night, or day, the payment is the same: those for which the payment is more are, an ox, a horse or a mare chained or fettered, found in the night upon corn; such ox as ought to be folded, that is, a weaned ox; whilst he is sucking, which is until the calends of winter, unless it be a cow which has not taken the bull, he is subject to the same law as his dam. A lamb and a kid while sucking are under the same law as the dam. A pig when it can turn up the cow-dung. A colt until the fourteenth day from its birth is subject to the same law as its dam. A chicken when it can roost, and crow under its mother's wing. A goose, and a duck, when they lay eggs.

7. Three kinds of animals for which the law is the same, if found either by night, or by day, upon corn: a sow; a sheep; and a goat.

8. There are three varieties of law as to swine found in a person's rick, or crop: one is, from the herd found a sow is taken; the second is, if less than a herd be found on corn, a penny for each goes to the owner of the corn; the third, if a sow be found in a meadow four pence is paid; a meadow is at all times to be closed against swine, for they injure the land by turning it up. If, however, swine be found in a wood, the owner of the wood has pannage according to his privilege, whether a lord, or an uchelwr.

9. There are three varieties of law as to sheep found upon corn: one is, from the flock found a sheep, although there may be more than a flock of the sheep, yet, if they belong to the same owner but one sheep is to be given; if, nevertheless, they belong to various owners, one shall be taken from each flock of the several owners: the second is, if there be not a legal flock, a farthing for each as far as five is to be paid: the third mode by which payment by law is made; if there be but five sheep, a penny only is given, as a penny cannot be divided into five parts, and when the law of Howel was made there was no farthing, for afterwards the penny was separated into a half-penny and a farthing.

10. There are three varieties of law as to animals that shall damage corn: one is, impounding them legally if found, as the law requires every animal to be impounded; the second is, killing animals that shall be found damaging corn; the third, unless they be found, the taking a relic by the owner of the corn, and asking the owner of the beast whether he will clear the beasts, that is, an oath truly and willingly; unless he clear the beast he is to compensate the damage, that is, to give a sound sheaf for an injured sheaf: the owner of the beasts, however, is not to have the injured sheaf, the sound sheaf being paid for the damage done: the sound sheaf is to be of the same kind of corn pulled out of the earth, and [bound] in the same manner, as the other.

stead of his own; there is to be neither dirwy, nor camlwrw for that, unless it be withheld: if it be withheld, let it be on the privilege it shall be claimed. The reason there is no punishment unless withheld is, the withholding is the illegality, and the illegality causes the punishment, for there is no punishment for a lawful thing.

2. For intention without deed, and error with deed, there is neither dirwy, nor camlwrw, unless withheld; thence it is said: it is bad to do bad, it is worse to continue in the wrong.

3. All property taken in error is to be claimed, and not withheld, because error is not legal: saying, it was taken for such and such, and withheld in place of such, or in the stead of another thing so and so was stricken.

4. Although there are various means by which a person's property is separated from him, either lawful, or unlawful, either with consent, or without consent; nevertheless, in some cases, the property can be claimed; in others, an equivalent can be had; in some, compensation; in others, a denial is obtained.

5. Property which can be reclaimed is: loan; deposit; and borrowing: for they are conveniencies. For a loan is to be returned whole, sound in limbs if it be an animal, if an ox so as to be able to step over the threshold. If a deposit, to be kept until the period, and then to be answerable to the owner, unless it be stolen from him by burrowing the earth: that is true if the deposit can be proved to have been given to the guardian. Every thing borrowed is to return as it came, and, therefore, nothing is to be borrowed that wears in use, and becomes thereby deteriorated.

6. Gift, and borrowing, and bargain, change the ownership of the property, and, therefore, a thing given cannot be reclaimed, if there be proof on the other part, when it shall be demanded, that it was given. Thou hast heard above, by how many means a gift occurs, and one of them is a present, a thing sent to a person by another through a messenger. What if the messenger give not the thing to the person? Who is to question him, and is any one? Here is the proof, that the person who sent it to the other by the messenger is not to question him: has he not parted with the possession of the property, when he said: 'Take this to yonder man;' he has parted with the possession, and therefore cannot sue: the other cannot, for he has not had possession of the property, and it was never his.

7. It is not legal for a person to claim a thing of which he is not the owner, or guardian.

IX. [OF SUITS.]

1. Three cases wherein a person shall describe his claim without the defendant's claim or answer to him : one is, if a defendant neglect three legal summonses, the claim is confessed: no claim, however, is adjudged against a person until the expiration of three summonses, and testimony is not to be given that a defendant will not come to the field, nor call for judgment to take place, until the third summons ; and those three summonses are to be legally made, however, and so called.

2. The second is, when the day for decision arrives, whether it be the second, or third day, or whatever day, there is then no time, nor lawful excuse, neither death, nor anything but ignorance of the judge's death, and if death be advanced as a lawful excuse it avails not, and the description of the claim as to his property is equally cogent as if he were alive, if it be his property. Unless the defendant come on the day for decision appointed by the judge, and the parties bound, the extent of the claim shall be adjudged against him : for he is not to have law who does not perform it.

3. In the third case, he has half his claim on the defunct debtor, or surety.

4. Three cases wherein a person is to claim all property which is to be reclaimed : one is, where a person shall see his property, be it whom it may who commits the illegality as to the property, he is there to claim as theft, and violence, and illegality ; and let the defendant there seek the lawful shields against the claimant.

5. The second is, if he do not see his property in another's hands, let him charge the one reputed as having his property, or committing illegality ; and there a different proceeding takes place, to wit, a prosecution, and raiths, according to the legal prosecution, if it be theft, or violence, or illegality.

6. Whatever it may be, whether in hand, or absent, if against consent, where swearing to the theft is appropriate, execution follows ; unless shields be had against the swearing, if it be to the amount for which hanging is the punishment, that is, four legal pence.

7. The third, where he gave his property : if through a surety, let him claim through surety ; if through proof, let him claim through proof.

8. Where a raith shall pertain for theft, if the raith fail, a dirwy is due, however small the worth of the thing; except those things for which a camlwrw only is due for stealing them, as a dog, a bird, and a wild animal, &c., and food theft by the necessitous.

9. Where a thief is to be sold, let him be paid for; if not paid for, let him be banished, if the thief be submissive to pay his worth.

10. Three properties for which there is a raith, and if it fail, execution does not follow, if the amount be such as to which the law adjudges a person to execution: these are, flour; bees; and money: for although the owner be ready to swear to them, he is not, only to the vessel in which they might be; for flour is like flour, and corn to corn, and bees to bees, and money to other money, and woollen yarn.

11. Loss by negligence, and illegal removal, and things impounded, are to be claimed where seen, for they were received from hand to hand by consent; it is illegal to remove property obtained by theft, or violence, or illegality, or loss by negligence; and if the claimant sue as illegal removal, he may, if he distinguish the illegality, whether theft, or violence, &c. It is safest, however, to claim this as illegal removal, and that where the thing shall be seen: to sue for an alltud; to sue for illegal impounding from one trev to another; or to sue for ousting a person from his dadenudd which he previously had.

12. No one is to claim property as taken in error, although he may so lose it; but let every one, who shall claim property taken instead of another thing, if withheld from him, claim it as surreption: and then it is necessary for the person, if the property be absent, and there is a prosecution, to procure a raith; if it be present, one of the three shields: birth and rearing; custody before loss; or arwaessaf. And it is no answer, nor lawful arddelw, for the defendant to say that he took the thing in mistake.

13. A person can charge an error as theft; [and, for] the death of an animal that damages any one's property, the person reputed to have caused the death of the animal can be sued by the owner of the animal.

14. If damage be reputed to have been done by a person to another's [animal,] or timber, or corn, or hay; if an animal be impounded, let the owner pay money for it; and he should not there deny the damage, for it rests on the oath of the captor to say where he found it in the act: and there a person gets compensation through his own means for his property:

and there the privilege of defendant is better than that of claimant, for having there his oath without compulsion, except for his being doubted by the claimant.

15. If an animal kill another in the custody of a herdsman, let the claimant prove it by the herdsman of the hamlet, unless there be another who can prove the killing of the animal by the other; the testimony, however, of the herdsman is of no force, but where an animal shall kill another in his custody.

16. If a person kill another's animal, let the claimant prove that through usual evidences, and let the other object to them if he can, or seek the oath of an absolver, and if he fail, let it be proved [against him;] for the testimony of a herdsman is of no force against a man: if, however, there be no herdsman, he can prove it through others.

17. What if the person be killed who is to prove it, is there a raith to deny that? There is no raith to deny an [act done by] an animal, and there is no law for murder but denying galanas.

18. There is no galanas for a bondman, only legal worth, and for what has a legal worth there is to be no raith, only the oath of the one charged with the murder, that he did not kill him; and if he fail in his oath it is a fault, and let him pay the worth of the bondman; if he prefer an absolver's oath, let him prove a negation of it by the one who did the act, and so he has the extent of his claim.

19. If a person [charge another] to have taken his bondman, let him proceed [to give his oath] on the relic [against the] other, and there he must produce a raith.

X. [OF DUES TO THE KING.]

due from his land and his own men ; the third mode is, from the penalties for illegalities done in his land, where they are due to him.

6. Three dues a lord is to have from his man without doing injustice to him : one is, the geld of his territory due to him and his household, which happens in various modes : the first is, his gwestva from the privileged maenols ; and his supper, or payment for it, that is, one pound, if not had between the calends of winter and Martinmas ; his dawnbwyds from the taeogs ; the feeding of his dogs ; dovræth ; and every due law shall adjudge to him in his territory ; to wit, military service ; summons ; expedition to border country ; submission ; fealty ; his booths ; his toll ; progress of his household ; work ; journey ; and his treasure : the second due he is to have is, his vicegerent due, as thou hast before : his third due is, the lawful chances which occur to him without injustice arising from his own sagacity, and God directing him.

7. Three lawful progresses are due from the country : one is, regal female progress ; the second is, the great progress after Christmas ; the third, the progress of an officer of the palace.

8. Two persons are to have a regal female progress : the queen ; and the privileged lady, that is, the king's daughter, when he shall be on a border country expedition.

9. The chief of the household is to have a great progress after Christmas with the household.

10. The three privileged officers he is to have on that progress are : a door-ward of the hall ; a sewer of food ; and a cook : they are to have the skins of the animals killed for the repasts, and the tallow, and fragments, and entrails, to buy clothes : they have not, however, sanctuary, nor free land ; and they have a food mess while with him.

11. Three further various casualties the king is to have without injustice : legal gobyr ; legal ebediws ; and all goods without an owner, which are not illegally lost : although he shall likewise have un-owned property illegally obtained, as you will find before.

12. A king is to have three legal gobyr ; they are called legal as there is no illegality in doing them : the first is, in giving a daughter by gift of kindred and investiture to a man, he has the gobyr, there is no illegality where there is consent, for it is no disgrace what he himself willeth to be : to the king belongs the gobyr, when she is given, as a maiden is the king's waste, and as when a waste is parted with he gains no more, so he has her gobyr. She had, when married, only her gwaddol, therefore her relative is to give her and her gwaddol to a proprietor, and that gwaddol renders her male children proprietors thenceforth; and as her brother is proprietor of his patrimony, her gwaddol constitutes her proprietorship if she abide by her kindred.

13. The second legal gobyr is, investiture fee.

14. The third gobyr is, for meering land where two contend.

15. Three persons who are to pay gobyr for investiture: one is, a son taken by a kindred, and lawfully admitted to land and soil; and that can only be done publicly: the second is, a gobyr paid by a relation, brother, or cousin, or second cousin, for their relative, for investiture of his land to them which went from them before he possessed his due, whoever he may be, whether an aillt, or a free man; if he be a free man, his ebediw is six score pence, for it is no more, which is paid for his land, and other six score pence for his investiture fee, for investment of his land, as not being heir to the person that died; for although he was not the offspring of his body, yet he was the offspring of the person to whom it previously belonged; and, therefore, the lord is to invest him with his due, and his original patrimony: third, a person who pays to the king for his office a pound and a half: so a relative of a chief of kindred gives twenty-four pence to the chief of kindred, when taken to a kindred.

16. Further, he is, by law, to have ebediws; for it is lawful for him to have ebediw from each of his men from whom it is due by law, if he have wherewith to pay; if not, he is to have his land.

17. There are three ebediws in law: an ebediw of a pound; an ebediw of six score pence; and an ebediw of three score pence: as the ebediw is, so is the amobyrr.

18. Three persons pay one pound of ebediw: the principal officers of the palace; a chief of kindred; and the officers of the country, the maer and canghellor: and so as to amobyrra.

19. Three various persons who pay six score pence of ebediw: the officers of the palace, excepting the principal ones; a breyr without office; and a gwahalaeth, that is, the son of a lord who is neither an edling, nor chief of kindred; if he take

20. Three persons who pay an ebediw of three score pence : a king's taecog ; an arddelw man ; and an alltud, whom the king has enfranchised.

21. Whoever shall die upon the king's land ; if a man, twenty-four pence is to be paid for his death clod ; if a woman, sixteen pence.

22. Three kinds of property without an owner the lord is to have without doing injustice : one, a marwdy ; the second is, what may be cast up by the sea, and left on the beach for three flows and three ebbs ; third, all property whose owner is unknown, or which may be denied.

23. Three lawful marwdys the king is to have : one, marwdy of sudden death, he is to have the share of the dead of the property ; the house of the king's apparitor, whose property is at the lord's mercy without doing injustice to him, because, for the great due he has, he is to lose his property at his death ; the third is, a bishop's palace, for his property is the king's waste, as he cannot bequeath it.

24. Three things the king is to have which the sea shall cast to land : a ship without an owner, and its cargo of goods ; the second is, dead fish if the king take them before the third flow and the third ebb, and if he do not take them then, the one who shall find them owns them ; live fish, however, caught in nets, or wears, or with hooks, belong to their owners, if they be alive ; available timber, trinkets, or similar things belong to him.

25. By three various modes a lord punishes his man for his illegality : one is, injury to his property ; second, injury to his life ; the third, the mode by which a lord is to punish a man, who is to furnish his palace by law, for illegality.

26. In three modes, by law, injury is done to a person's property as penalty for illegality : one is, legal punishment ; the second is, camlwrw ; the third is, dirwy.

27. There are three legal punishments : a [fat] cow ; a pannage sow ; and amobyr for illegality.

28. The king is to have three cows : a cow for the army ; a cow for the feast of St. Mor ; and the cow which may remain of the spoil from a border country, after every person has had his share.

29. Three amobyrs the king is to have because of their illegal extraction : one is, for publick concubinage ; second, for taking children from the lawful bed ; third, for seduction : each of these is illegal, therefore he has an amobyrr for them.

30. There are three publick concubines : one is, a man cohabiting with a woman in one house in common, without marriage, without gift and investiture of kindred ; second, taking a woman by gift and investiture of kindred, and then separating from her ; for the previous cohabitation, [when they were together,] the amobyrr is to be paid, for the dissolved marriage by consent is null ; the third is, a woman living in a notorious scandalous manner.

31. In three modes children are taken from the lawful bed : a woman swearing a child over the relics ; if suffered by the man for a year and a day he cannot afterwards deny : the second is, a woman affiliating a son to a man on her deathbed through her confessor ; if she recover, she pays an amobyrr to the king, although begot in bush and brake : the third mode, if she, by word, affiliate a son to the father, without swearing to the extremity, without denial ; there she pays amobyrr for confessing her sin, and not for [the concubinage.]

32. There are two kinds of seduction, one by consent, and one without consent : seduction by consent is in two ways, within a house, and without a house ; if it be in bush and brake, let the woman pay her amobyrr, if her raith fail ; if within a house, as in a habitation with an owner, if he do not take surety for her amobyrr, let the man of the house pay the amobyrr for unlawfully receiving her, as for receiving other things unlawfully although greater : seduction without consent is rape, for which, if she complain of the rape, and the man fail in defence, the amobyrr falls on the man.

33. In three modes there is a camlwrw : one is, for disobedience to the king, and that occurs in many ways ; the second is, doing something illegally wrong against the king ; third, doing wrong, or illegality, for which there pertains a camlwrw from the country or its inhabitants.

34. In various ways a person may do wrong against his lord : to wit, taking the nests of his birds ; cutting his timber, or his buildings ; killing his pet, or his animals ; concealment of his wild swarms by the taeogs ; the throwing down of oak trees across the road where he passes ; the breaking up his highways, and his lawful and defined meers, and his lawful paths, and his lawful lanes ; letting animals into his lawful nets ; pound breach, or impediment ; concealing his pannage ; swearing manifest perjury in purveyances ; bearing arms in any place where they ought not, but their three depositories of arms, or the three lawful depositories of spears in courts; the killing of birds that are not to be killed, upon the land of a person without his permission; also, as to the skins of the three vermins, whose skins the king is to have, wheresoever they may be killed; and the birds whose worth he is to have; approaching the judges during their consultation; or ordering impounding from one trev to another; or impounding strays unlawfully where they are not to be; marking [meers] where they ought [not; wrongful occupation of property;] concealing unowned property concealing what the lord and his officers are entitled to, and swearing perjury in respect thereto; making open attacks; doing wrong as to two persons, one banished, or one food interdicted, and afterwards seeing him, or receiving him into his house; or the three ways by which a judge forfeits a camlwrw, as thou wilt find, where it is spoken concerning a judge.

35. First, the king's hart, with its lawful collops; if any one of them be found in the hand of a person, the [illegality] is acknowledged; if not found, the verdict of the country pertains to them. Where they can be proved, let it be proved. [The third way of doing wrong to his men is, where he shall have a plaint, as to which there shall appertain a camlwrw.]

36. In three ways disobedience is punished: by imprisonment; interdiction of food; and banishment. Although banishment and interdiction of food are the same in kind, there is a difference of acceptance, however, between them: to banish a person is pertinent, who is present, and subject to dirwy and unable to pay it; and to [be banished] until he conform to law: interdiction of food pertains to absence for neglect of a summons, without excuse, or for a camlwrw where present: where there may be disability such an one is not to suffer death, notwithstanding his being found in the country; but no one is to respect him. Imprisonment pertains to the disobedient, being able, until he shall be obedient; that is the law for disobedience. Food-forbiddance pertains to the disobedient and unable, where a camlwrw is befitting: as to the disobedient and unable, imprisonment is to be inflicted upon him, until he shall be obedient. And in like manner banishment is pertinent where a dirwy is proper, both to the obedient and disobedient, and the unable and able. No one is to be banished, nor to be food-forbidden, on account of the suit of a party, but for a suit of the lord for illegality: for it belongs to the lord to punish every illegality.

vii. Tri dyn ny ddyly camlwrw arnunt : arglwydd ; ar neb afo drostaw yn holi ; nat ynat ; canys gwell ygneiddyaeth na dim pressennawl.

37. There are three kinds of disobedience : one is, neglecting a lawful summons, without substantial causes ; the second is, attending to the summons, and, notwithstanding that, not answering to the suit when required, without naming a lawful arddelw, so as not to answer, or quitting the session unlawfully and receding, or not doing right when required ; the third is, fleeing, or any thing of the nature of fleeing, that is, an entering a sanctuary, or practising evasions.

XI. [OF CAMLWRWS.]

1. There are three kinds of camlwrw : camlwrw onefold ; [camlwrw twofold ;] and camlwrw threefold.

2. In three ways a onefold camlwrw is paid : by the claimant failing in stating his claim ; by the defendant's failing in his defence ; by contempt of [summons] on the part of either, without lawful excuse.

3. In three ways a claimant becomes liable to a camlwrw : by receding from his plaint in the session ; by his not following up his suit lawfully and timely ; thirdly, by failing through a legal decision.

4. In three ways a camlwrw falls upon a defendant : by unlawful neglect of summons ; by his being condemned through a lawful decision ; by a failure in his arddelw to defend him.

5. Three cases where a twofold camlwrw is paid : one is, when tongue-wound is paid to a lord ; the second is, when a person shall approach the judges, while pronouncing judgment, if the king be present ; third, when a person shall be summoned against another, to the intent of being examined, and he and the complainant coming into the presence of the king in court, and then the complainant receding from before the king.

6. In three ways a threefold camlwrw arises : one is, for the three last of the accessories of galanas, for allowing a raith to the accessory ; the second is, where a fugitive defendant, and a surety for him, shall neglect to appear on the part of the king, without a lawful excuse on his behalf, when he comes ; the third is, where a fugitive plaintiff, and a surety for his following up his claim, are called three times in three courts, there is to be a camlwrw for each contempt to the lord, although he goes free as to the claim, for that he came not to the first.

7. Three persons upon whom no camlwrw is to be imposed : a lord ; and such as shall act for him in claiming ; and a judge ; for the function of a judge is better than any temporal thing.

viii. Tri dyn y trayana brenhin camlwrw ac wynt : disteyn am camlwrw swyddwyr ; pencynydd oe gynyddyon ; pengwastrawt oe wastrodion, lle perthyno hynny.

8. Three persons with whom the king shares a camlwrw : the steward in the camlwrw of the servants ; the chief huntsman from his huntsmen ; the chief groom, from his grooms, where that pertains.

9. A camlwrw only arises for testimony in a suit that cannot be objected to in the court, as to a former suit upon the subject, or judgment against the claimant ; or, from there being a lawful defence spoken by the defendant for himself, so that he may not have to answer to it ; and then the claimant forfeits a camlwrw. A claimant never forfeits a dirwy, where there shall be a plaint and a counter-plaint.

XII. [OF THEFT.]

1. If there were not theft in the burning of a house, without the knowledge of its owner, there could not be accessaries, any more than to any careless fire.

2. There is never an accessory to an unintentional act.

3. The columns of law are : homicide ; second, theft ; third, burning a house, or other thing.

4. There are three kinds of punishment for theft in absence : a dirwy ; banishment ; and sale.

5. There are three kinds of dirwy for theft : one is, the dirwy of a bondman for theft in absence, or a pound, for less than the worth of a penny ; second, a dirwy of three pounds, although absent, for theft in absence ; third, a twofold dirwy for killing ferociously.

6. The three dirwys of a bondman : for his first theft, six score pence ; the second time, one pound ; the third time, a limb of him who commits the theft is to be cut off, as thou wilt find below.

7. There are three thieves subject to dirwy, that is, three cases where a dirwy for theft occurs : one is, where a person shall acknowledge it from his own mouth, without any thing in his hand, whether there be a charge, or not : the second is, in respect to the king's hart, which is one in grease ; and it is so only when there are lawful pieces in it ; and that once in the year, from the feast of St. Cyrig until the calends of winter : and a thief who shall kill the animal of another in a yard, or a byre stealthily ; or a person who shall fail in exonerating his lawful guest during the night ; or where there shall be a view of theft against him.

8. Three thefts for which a raith occurs : to impute theft to a person, he undergoing a raith, his raith failing, nothing found in his hand, and innocent by his own account, the lord is to have three pounds ; the second is, seeking a person's house for theft, the person obstructing the search, and adjudging a raith upon him for the suspicion, three pounds is his punishment; third, where there shall be view, and the raith fail, then three pounds.

9. There shall be no dirwy for theft, unless the person fail in the oath of an absolver to the loser; if he fail, there is to be a raith, and a fine if it fail him.

10. Three cases where a twofold dirwy occurs: one is, for the burning a building with property therein, and rendering the property useless to the owner, and to the perpetrator, six pounds; second, for the killing of a beast in a yard, hiding it, and rendering it useless to the owner, and found hidden, and torn, or stinking; the third case, where there is a twofold dirwy, is, for the killing a horse, or a mare, in a stable, or out.

11. In three ways there is a dirwy for theft: by the confession of the party, out of his own mouth; by the failure of a raith; by the failure of guardians, in exonerating lawful guests, for night theft.

12. There are three thieves liable to be sold: a thief as to whom a competent information be had from a clerical professor, that is, one ordained in the church; second, a thief confederate with one who is to be executed; third, a thief in whose hand there shall be found the worth of less than four legal pence, and who cannot get a defence, although he is not to be executed; as there is not in his hand a lawful thing with worth thereon: no one shall be hanged that does not transgress the law: the two first above mentioned are not to be hanged; because that no one is to lose either life, or limb, upon the word of another; the word of another, however, proclaims him an infamous thief. Although he loses not his life, yet he is to lose seven pounds, because of the stigma, unless he can restore the property: and here his punishment is banishment.

13. There are three banishable thieves: a thief whose raith shall fail, and who cannot pay his dirwy; his banishment follows; second, a saleable thief who cannot pay his worth, and for his inability he is to be banished; third, a thief who acts with savage violence, such as the killing of a beast in a yard, or a horse in a stable; if he cannot pay the value to the claimant, and to the lord twofold, he is to be banished.

14. Three persons who pay the worth of a thief, without reputation of theft against them, without anything stolen in their hands, and without a competent information against them: a person who shall liberate a thief, after being committed by the lord to his custody, wilfully, or shall suffer him to escape by his negligence, and his theft acknowledged; let him pay the worth of a thief, if he be able, or let him be banished, [if unable,] unless a dirwy [for theft] be ordered, then let him pay the dirwy: second, a gorfodog for a thief, who is a saleable thief; let him pay as the thief should pay: no one is to be placed on gorfodogaeth for one who is to lose his life or limb: if it be for a person who is liable to pay a dirwy for theft, he may become a gorfodog; let him then pay the dirwy for the other: third, one who shall kill cattle, or any animal that a thief has, who shall be caught, or a prisoner with theft in his hand, in the court; then such animal is reputed theft, as if found in his hand, as there cannot be made [any appraisement.]

15. There is no proceeding upon a competent information, until there shall be the oath in the three lawful places: upon the door of a church; the chancel, which is the choir; and the altar: no counter-oath avails after that; for there can there be no raith, if a graduate of the church inform.

16. There is to be no raith on a reputed thief, that is, by lawful accusation in the court against him.

17. Three cases where a person is to be executed; without treason to the lord, without ferocity, without theft in his hand: first, where a banished person shall be found, for the third time, in the country; the second is, where there shall be a saleable thief, and who is not disposed to pay his worth, although in his power; third, where there shall be a fugitive thief.

18. One case where theft in absence loses its character, from the possibility of swearing [to part and not] to the whole; it is absent, for that it is not entirely in hand: and for that part is not the whole: yet it is necessary there should be guardians, or [an arddelw] there.

Thus far has been spoken concerning theft in absence, and its punishments.

XIII. NOW AS TO THEFT PRESENT, AND THE PUNISHMENT ATTACHED TO IT.

1. Three punishments for theft in hand occur: the first is, imprisonment; the second is, the cutting off a limb; the third is, hanging.

2. Three persons whom it is proper to imprison: a thief with theft in his hand; a malefactor on his flight; and a homicide.

3. Three persons whom the king is to order the cutting off their limbs: the first is, a bondman for the third theft in hand; second, a person who shall commit a rape

XIV. LLYMA GOSPEU GALANAS.

i. O deir ffordd y dylu dyn fot yn eneit faddeu: o ladrat barnedic y groc; a brat arglwydd; a ffyrnic weithret llawruddupon a maid, and acknowledged, and who may not be able to collect a dirwy for rape, is to have his testicles extracted; third, a bondman, who does saraad to a free man, is to have his right hand cut off, or his foot, if with his foot he strike him.

4. There were three ordeals by the law of Dyfnwal, for theft, or galanas, or treason to a lord: the hot iron; second, the boiling water, by putting the limb that did the deed therein; the third was, combat to such as should demand it lawfully; and there would be [no punishment for] the one who might overcome in the combat, that was instead of proof; and so, in [amending the laws,] Howel the good and his judges observed that that was not just; so they established proof by men, for [combat] they did not commend, and proof of deed willed, where that might be appropriate, and raiths for reputed acts, and conceded to every body his denial, until it should fail him, and guardians, and arddelw for thefts in hand; nor, when they might fail, that his defence should fail to the person; and, in addition to that, the justice of the country enlightening others; and as to claims of a lord, in particular; since it is not pertinent for a lord either to swear on a relic, in prosecuting, or to swear on a relic, in swearing to property, or to swear in proving before evidences. Those three things cannot, in all things, be omitted between claimant and defendant.

5. In three ways is theft present acknowledged: by the confession of the party; the failure of his guardians; and the failure of his warrant.

6. Three punishments as to property of theft present, that is, theft in hand: the first is, its accessaries; second, restoration of the property to the complainant by the thief; third, the putting to death, if the thing stolen be of that amount.

7. Three persons who do no right to such as may sue them, and which cannot be done: a condemned thief; a tyrant; and an acknowledged traitor to a lord.

8. Three things, in respect to theft, which ought not to be: receiving it back from the thief, if he be [captured,] without accusation; and although there should also be an accusation, it should not be done, but the thief secured until the trial; the second is, compromising the theft; thirdly, the setting the thief at liberty.

XIV. THESE ARE THE PUNISHMENTS OF GALANAS.

1. In three ways is a person to suffer death: for theft that deserves hanging; for treason against a lord; and a ferocious deed of homicide. Some of the judges say, that for treason against a lord, combat used formerly to be usual, for there can be no claimant in respect thereto, but the lord himself; and no man can enter into law with his lord: it is safest, however, in that case, that there should be a raith, as for any other ferocious act.

2. There are three lawful executions: one is, hanging, for theft; revenge and slaying, for homicide; and burning, for a ferocious act: this is the case where there is, by law, slaying for galanas: if a man, that is under the pale of a gwaesawr, should kill a man of the king, unless right be done for him, within lawful periods, he is to be delivered up to the kindred of the slain; so also a bondman who shall kill a boneddig: and those are the instances where a lord gets none of the property although enforcing the law.

3. Three cases where the king has the galanas, or full payment for it: where an idiot is committed to his care, and he be killed; where death takes place from an animal, or any thing else, the kindred shall have nothing; neither shall the king have what caused the death, unless it be disowned by the owner; unless he disown it, however, let him pay for the act of his animal. A galanas never falls upon a kindred, except where a raith shall fail, or . . . break

4. Three persons who are liable to spoliation, by law, and who are not to be destroyed: a person who shall contemn the law of court; a fugitive from one country to another; and a murderer who shall commit homicide in the king's dominion: whatever shall be had, from time to time, of their moveable property, belongs to the king.

5. Three punishments for ferocious acts: the payment of galanas for the slain; death to him who does the deed; and harriving spoliation of the property of the murderer.

6. Three persons who are not to be put to death, although they may be murderers: a king; a priest; and a minstrel: and, therefore, they also shall not have a share, excepting the king.

7. Three punishments for homicide with a weapon: a dirwy for fighting; harriving spoliation; and punishment for polluting the king's earth with blood. If it be for ferocity: twofold punishments and twofold payment; only that there shall be but one harriving spoliation for it.

8. Three spoils to which the king is entitled: harriving spoliation; endured spoliation; and the spoil of a border country.

LAWS, II.

9. Three endured spoliations to which the king is entitled : first, for homicide, the king owns all the property of the murderer, that shall be seized from time to time ; second, the property of a person for a hart if he lose the king's raitth ; third, a fugitive between two countries and a runaway : a runaway is a person upon whom the law presses with a summons three times, without his sending lawful excuses, and contemning law, after his being sought for, at his habitation, three times without finding him ; then the claim becomes admitted against him ; admission is the same as if the claim were confessed.

XV. [OF LAW.]

1. There are three legal replications in law, differing from each other : confession ; or denial ; or lawful defence to not answering to the claim.

2. In three modes confession occurs : confession of the claim by the party from his own mouth, in session ; confession, by an appointed advocate, of the claim in session ; and confession out of session, to the lord, or the judge ; and then the lord should incline to mercy.

3. Three things equal in effect to confession : contempt of session, without an excuse ; remaining silent beyond the time ; and the failure of arddelw.

4. No prosecution is complete without oath ; nor any denial without oath in the commencement ; and according to that there shall be raitths, whether one or many.

5. There are three kinds of lawful defence against a claim : the first is, that it is not timely demanded, or its lawful demand is not known, and that being set forth by the defendant, against the claimant, in the session ; and his defence is right, that he is not to answer to the claim, until there shall be a new plaint, or claim against him : the second is, a defence against the claimant, that there never should be an answer to the claim, from its being a claim of that kind, as closes, by law, between the claimant and his right, and has been cancelled : the third is, a defence against the claimant, with an answer ; and, nevertheless, that nothing, because of the claim, shall be lost ; such as saying, that satisfaction has been made for it, or something similar ; or, that he was before cast, as to that claim ; and that proved by judges, or judge, [that passed the] judgment.

6. In three various modes one kind of kindred is competent to a full denial : one is, to keep the ownership of property for a person ; the second is, to prove his being, on the night he was reputed to do the deed, in such house and house; and thus lawfully exonerate his guest; the third is, an arddelw, that is, a way to avoid a claim.

7. There are three causes for making customs: one is, to amend the law as being so heavy in regard to saraads, that is, an arbitration through arbitrators; the second is, where there is no written law, nor any precedent, to follow the custom; third, as it is not easy for a man to litigate with his lord, to allow the custom: litigation with a lord is not facile, as a lord upholds law.

8. Law is respectable, and noble, and just, and eloquent, according to nature and natural reason; it is good not only for the individual, but for the country in general; it was not made for secresy, but to settle the usages and publick necessities of a country which belong to the time and place: a raith is a compendium and publick guidance against dark fraud and oppression of parties.

9. Law is respectable, as the testimony of any disrespectable person is of no force in law, as his word is of no avail, and it sets aside bondmen and alltuds from the common law.

10. Law is noble, as Howel the good, king of Cymru, and the proprietors formed it from the wisdom of their own hearts and bodies, and, therefore, law and custom are the offspring of that king, therefore, neither of them are to oppose each other more than brothers, and if there be a custom contrary to law it is not to be observed: brothers are to be united, as each is to support the other by oath and property; so law and custom.

11. Law is just, because it commands every one not to wrong another, and to leave to each his own property; and punishes such as do otherwise, if resorted to.

12. Law is copious, as there is no deficiency in it, for there is no deficiency where explanations and precedents can be found to terminate every litigation and irregularity: disobedience is the mother of law, for if there were no disobedience there would be no need of law; for the disobedience is the illegality, the illegality is contrary to law, the law avenges the illegality.

13. Three things a bench of judges are not to do without the leave of the lord: eat; drink; or separate.

14. Three things which strengthen a person in his right: possession; just occupation; and preconservancy: possession of live stock; occupation of land; and improvement.

xv. Tri chyngwarchadw cyfreithiawl sydd: o dyn athy ac esgubawr.

15. There are three legal preconservancies: a kiln; a house; and a barn.

16. Three men who are not to be dispossessed until a decision be made: a complainant for moveable property by the strength of his plaint is to be put in possession; a defendant [of property] is to be left in possession, if he come upon summons, until a decision shall take place; a married woman who shall assert her pregnancy by her husband, when he may die, is to have time to remain in the house until her delivery; she is, however, to give surety for a camlwrw to the king if her warrant fail her, her warrant being that she is pregnant of a son: and that is a person giving surety for a camlwrw before committing illegality if it do occur: and that is a law that can be enforced where threats are used against a person, who can demand surety for the peace, and against illegality, which, if done, the gorfodog is liable to the camlwrw.

17. There are three varieties of claim: one is, a claim between claimant and defendant; the second is, a claim without an owner, that is, a claim without a plaint, that is, the claim of a lord against his man for his due, or for illegality, for to the lord belongs the punishment for illegality; third, a claim by one without right against another, as the claim of an inheritor on sufferance seeking advance at the expense of the owners of the land; it is not right to listen to him, for he has no claim to more than he was admitted to, if admitted at all; if not admitted, likewise he has no claim: or the claim of a person who may lose his patrimony by the ways he is to lose it, or his son, and afterwards seeking a share along with his kin.

18. Three things which enforce: a lord, to enforce every thing, as to which there shall be no surety of what shall be due by law; a surety, to enforce his suretiship, and to conduct the pledge openly, and who takes the first cudgelling; third, an impounder of cattle.

19. The three supports of a pledge: a hand to send; an arm; and a shoulder to bear.

20. Three persons who cannot be summoned: a lord, that is, a king; one who is deaf; and one who is ignorant of the language: since they know not what may be said to them.

21. Three things of the same privilege as a summons: a plaint of skulking, and a surety for the complainant that he sought him, which, if it be not prosecuted, is subject to camlwrw; an appointment, where that shall pertain to a defendant, if he come

22. Three things which accord in law, although it may be deemed extraordinary that they do so : guardians, after prosecution, and that means, to exonerate a guest against theft in absence : and a raith after swearing, that is, where it shall be said by a person, that it was forced upon him against his will ; or that the thing sworn to was left with him in keeping, in his hand : and, believing persons who saw not the thing, and who know nothing about it, rather than the persons who see, and who know of it ; and that occurs where persons charge another with theft, as having seen him, in broad daylight, going through a trev, when the sun was shining equally upon hill and dale, with the stolen bullock in his possession ; if the other get his raith of not having ever seen that, they are to be credited, and he who knew and saw it is not to be credited.

23. Three persons whose houses are not marw dys : a judge of the court ; a youth under fourteen years of age ; and a king : since there is no one having a right thereto.

24. Three pledges which do not lapse until the end of a year and a day : gold ; a lorica ; and a golden vessel.

25. Three pledges which never lapse : a coulter ; a cauldron ; and a fuel axe.

26. Three pledges which lapse the day they are taken ; that of a surety who shall enforce not his suretiship, although he confesses it ; that taken for the sentence on theft ; and that taken for acknowledged galanas.

27. Three men whose pledges lapse if given : a surety ; a lord ; and the owner of the property.

28. Three cases where there is to be testimony as to a word : the first is, where a person's pleader testifies against another's faulty word for his employer ; the second is, where one, who is to have tongue-wound by law, testifies to another's squabbling with him during proclamation of silence in a session, or church ; the third is, where breach of silence occurs in a session which the maer is to testify. Every deed to which there does not pertain a raith can be testified to, and proof brought concerning it.

29. Three ways in which an arddelw is stronger than guardians : an arddelw frees a man from a claim, and takes it upon himself, which a guardian does not; second, an arddelw cannot be objected to, nor held as disrespectful; third, there is no need of many arddelws, but there must be many guardians.

30. Three cases where there must be many arddelws: one is for property third, where he shall give many co-proprietors as warrant.

XVI. [OF WITNESSES.]

1. Three witnesses who do not swear on the relic, and cannot be objected to: a lord between his two men if they be equally connected with him, for no one can put him to the relic; if one be nearer connected to him than the other, his testimony is of no force as to the extent of the claim, unless he swear, and if he swear, he is then to have nine days to call to memory as to his oath.

2. A father between his two sons, if they be by one mother, swears only this loose oath: 'By the Being who created me a father, and ye from me, true is what I have said between you:' if they be not, however, by the same mother, his testimony is of no force, unless he swear to the extremity.

3. A judge, likewise, takes no oath in what manner he adjudged, but, nevertheless, he swears, if he do not remember giving judgment between claimant and defendant, and then he has nine days, and let them cause him to say thus: 'To thee I adjudged the decision:' he cannot be objected to as a witness between them.

4. Three kinds of witnesses who swear, and who cannot be objected to, because they are to be denied: these are, sureties; contract-men; and parties to a release: they can bear testimony.

5. In three ways are evidences more effective than witnesses: one is, a witness is not to prove knowing and seeing the thing against witnesses, and an evidence is to do so; second, a witness is not to charge a crime upon any body, nor illegality, and neither can he, and an evidence can; third, a witness cannot prove the truth after falsehood, and an evidence can do so.

6. In three ways are evidences more effective than guardians: evidences cannot and are not to be held disrespectful, and guardians can be; the second is, guardians are attainted through evidences, and their privilege and usages may be depreciated, that their word may not avail, and evidences are never attainted through guardians; the third cause is, that one guardian is of no effect to obtain the extent of a claim, but one witness or one evidence is effective, such as a surety.

7. There are three distinctions between evidences and guardians: one guardian keeps to every one his own, which an evidence does not; a guardian conveys to none anything that another has, and an evidence can convey it; a guardian may be attained before an oath, an evidence is to be objected to after an oath.

8. There are three distinctions between evidences and witnesses: testimony may be as to a word, such as testifying to a judge, as to a faulty word that may be in a claim, or a defence, and there can be no evidence as to a word; and this is the reason, the teithi of an evidence are, knowing and seeing, a word cannot be seen from the mouth of any body, unless it be written; it may be testified, however, to a judge, or gwrdas, that the faulty word was spoken: the second is, that there is scarcely an instance in law, where a person shall have the extent of a claim through witnesses alone, without evidences besides, and, in many instances, he may have it through evidences without witnesses; for they are not the teithi of a witness to swear that what is put in his mouth was testified to him: the third instance is, witnesses may be objected to through evidences, but evidences are never objected to through witnesses.

9. Three cases where guardians are appropriate: for living or dead property; for privilege, or lack of privilege, in another; and for lawful guests.

10. Three things most effective in law: righteous judgment; an evidence, being a single person, whose testimony shall be believed, since he cannot be objected to, if he be as the law declares; and a proved contract.

11. Three objections to a raith: defect of relationship; defect of a devotee; and defect of age.

12. There are three distinctions between guardians and a raith: a raith completely exonerates a person from a charge, and it speaks no evil [against any one,] and which guardians do not; a raith cannot be doubted, and the words of guardians may be doubted, so that what they say shall not stand; a raith is not to swear that the animal in the hand of a person sworn to is his property, but that a person is innocent of the theft charged upon him, and, therefore, a raith is for absent property, and guardians swear that the party is the owner of the property that is in his hand.

13. There are three distinctions between an arddelw and a raith: there is no arddelw but to property in hand; but where the skin of an animal shall be found upon a

XVII. [OF RELATIVES.]

1. There are three kinds of relatives on the side of the father, among whom land is shared: a brother; a cousin; and a second cousin.

2. Three relations on the side of the mother who share land with their relatives: an uncle, being a mother's brother; a mother's cousin; and a cousin to himself, where a person shall obtain land by maternity.

3. There are three car-shattered persons: the son of an alltud by a Cymraes; an accepted taeog in the service of a person; and a wealthy person by inheritance upon the land of another.

4. Three sons entitled to land, to which the father before them had no right: the son of a dumb person; a son who shall have maternity; and a free foster son to an aillt, by the consent of a lord.

5. Three persons entitled to land, to which their sons are not entitled: the fathers of three brothers by the same mother and same father shall have land; and the others shall not have it.

6. Three persons who share land with another without relationship between them: the son of a breyr put to foster with a taeog, by the consent of the king; the son of a man upon register land, with his co-occupiers; and a person who shall get land by a cry over the abyss.

7. Three persons who pay ebediw, without land: an innate boneddig; a pensioned man; and a youth fourteen years of age, that is, the son of an aillt is to have his arddelw from thence forward; and his ebediw is for his arddelw.

XVIII. [OF SUITS AND PLEDGES.]

1. Three things which deteriorate [law:] sufferance; a contract; and inability.

2. The three stays of a suit: the denying it altogether; the proving of it; and the objecting to witnesses.

3. The three stays of a suit, without confession, and without denial: a stay that there is no obligation to answer it; the death of one of the parties; and a lawful excuse, at the place, on the behalf of one.

4. Three things as to which there is no need for proof: there is no need for proof upon a confession, but to testify; there is no need for proof as to a nullity, of its being a nullity, let the other party, however, prove that it is a nullity ; the third case, as to a judgment, excepting the testimony of the judge, as to how it was decided.

5. Three animals whose worth augments not, however high the privilege of their owners : a house cur ; a goat ; and a sheep.

6. Three kinds of animals for which no one is to lose his life if stolen : a dog ; a bird ; and every wild animal, for, if wild, it cannot be caught, if not caught, it cannot be sworn to, if not sworn to, it cannot cause loss of life.

7. Three pledges free to use, before they lapse : a milch cow ; a harp ; and a throw-board : for they will not be worse on that account.

8. Three persons exempt from pledge : a judge ; a priest ; and a mediciner of the household.

9. Three periods for a lawful pledge to lapse : one is, a pledge for corn damage lapses not until the kalends of winter, and it cannot be refused for corn, if put in its sheaf ; second, the ninth day, as to surety and debtor, and other adjudged property ; third, as to a cuirass, and vessels of gold, which do not lapse until the end of the year.

XIX. HERE OF THEFT, AND VIOLENCE, AND SURREPTION.

1. They are illegal, and can be reclaimed if seen ; if not seen, they can likewise be claimed, and then it is necessary either to compensate, or deny.

2. If the thing lost by theft, or violence, or surreption be present, there it pertains to claim it, in the hand it is left, by swearing to it, that is, keeping the ownership of the property by the owner.

3. A denial there is 'of no force to preserve to the defendant the ownership of the property, that being too little to effect it, unless he shall have some one with him to assist him, and none better than his next neighbours.

4. If the theft be present, he is thus to swear to it : to swear to God, in the first place in every oath, and the relic, that there was no owner to the property but him and his wife, if he have one, and his lord. He mentions his wife in swearing, because she owns half the property, if she be an endowed wife. Why cannot she give, or lend, or sell the property, without leave, with the exception of what the law allows her to give, when she participates in every swearing ? The husband is the chief while they are together, and it is most right to follow the chief.

LAWS, II.

5. And after so swearing, to swear that it was not separated from him in any way but by theft, or violence, or surreption; and so the other has his essentials, and his guardians, and his warrant; which, if he can get, the claimant must then swear to it, on the day of decision, in the hand of the arwaesav, or the guardians, in the manner above mentioned: and name the day, week, season, trev, and place.

6. The reason why he is to swear to it in every hand is, that he may charge it, that he lost the property by theft, or by violence, &c. as he charged not the theft upon any one more than another.

7. If he had said, when swearing, that it was not separated from him in those ways, only taken by the person in whose hand the theft was found, he could not have proceeded against any one but the first: and here is a case he is not to name the defendant, and if he name him he loses the extent of his claim: and that is one of the stays of swearing; the second is; a person seeking to swear to an animal past its prime, as a cow after her ninth calf, an ox after its sixth work year, a horse without [teithi,] without flesh, without teeth, blemished, as worth more than its former legal worth; it is wrong to so appraise it, and it cannot be done by law, for the worth never lowers if it be unblemished.

8. Such appraisement only pertains to a thing in hand, but where a stolen skin be found by a person, only the legal worth of the thing can be had, as the living thing cannot be had together with the skin: there is the case where a thing in hand is sworn to, and only the worth of it had.

9. It pertains not to a claimant who shall find his property in the hand of a thief, or in a position of the same character, or with a person who took the property by violence, or surreption, and [which] he swears [to have lost] after the parties are legally arranged, to name the one who took the property, or the one in whose hands it is; but say, it was taken from him by theft, or violence, or surreption: and, therefore, it is necessary for the person in whose hands the property may be to name his arddelw, and there is no need for him to deny the theft, for his arddelw is a sufficient denial.

10. Three persons who are of the same worth as the one they liberate: the one who shall liberate a thief is of the same worth as the thief if found, that is, seven pounds; the one that is a gorfodog to liberate another from prison, is to pay the same as the person he bailed if found. Is he to be hanged if the other ought? No: for, if the other ought, a surety or a gorvodog is not to be taken for him, for no one in peril can be given upon gorfodogaeth. The third is, a person who shall be a pledge for another, at the king's pleasure, for injury done; he is to suffer the same penalty as the one he represents.

XX. [TRIADE.]

1. Three animals whose worth is not augmented, or lowered: the principal of the swine, which is, the leader; the boar of the herd; and the dawnbwyd sow, that is paid to the lord; and then the life is of twofold value to the flesh, until the feast of St. John of the swine; again, from the feast of St. John of the swine onwards, thirty pence is its value; and then the flesh is twice the value of the life.

2. The three coequals of saraad: blood; a bruise; and a box on the ear.

3. Three persons whose saraad, although not equal, is not to be anywise augmented: an alltud; a bondman; and the domestic of a breyr, whose saraad is three standard kine, that is, cattle without augmentation with them of increase money.

4. Three persons whose saraad is to be augmented: a breyr; a taeog; and an innate boneddig.

5. Three things whose worth is not to be augmented, whether free or bond shall get them: a wound; a scar of disgrace; and a bruise.

6. Three things which are not to be augmented: the saraad of an alltud, or a bondman; the wyneb-werth of every one; and ill-usage to a corpse: wyneb-warth is the saraad of a person without augmentation, and without money payment; saraad is a greater disgrace than wyneb-warth; the saraad of a boneddig is greater than of a bondman; not so much

7. In three modes augmentation takes place on that which is to be augmented: the first is, a legal penny, which is augmented as much as its half, that is, a half-penny: the second is, galanas, which is augmented thrice as much as the half of its third; and in like manner the second third; and in like manner the third third of that first named; and that is to be after collecting together so many as the half of six score kine; or, where there shall be nine score; or, where there shall be three score: thirdly, upon saraad there is augmented as much as the third itself; and this is the way it is to be; twenty pence along with every cow, that is, equal to the third of three score; and thus it is to be raised, where there shall be six kine, two viii. Nyt arddyrcheif ar sarhaet eithyr ar dor naw buw, a their byw, a chwebuw.

ix. Nyt arddyrcheif ar alanas eithyr ar naw ugeinmuw, a chweugeinmuw a thru-geinmuw: eithyr sarhaet teuluwr brenhin pedeir byw a phedwarugeint aryant; nyt a y alanas herwydd y deuluwryaeth cyt ymarddelwo o honei, peth amgen herwydd y tat neu y bencenedyl neu y frawt.

Dymma herwydd breint y bencenedyl, neu y dat, neu y frawt y telir hi, a honno a arddyrcheif arney ac uwch yw hynny no theuluwryaeth cany bydd teuluwr nep eithyr yn y fywyt; ac iawnaf yw yn ol yr uchaf y freint ar pennaf. Ac felly y dywedir am feichiogi gwreic iawnaf yw barnu a holi yn wr noc yn wreic; cany wypper peth fo ae gwr ae gwreic.

xi. Tri pheth a ddyly cyngaws neu dafodyawc y wneuthur: dywedut yn gyfartal, fal na bo rhy uchel na rhy issel rhac digiaw wrthaw; canys Aristotles a ddyweit may y cymherfedd a ddylyr y ethol: nyt iawn y neb yn ceissiw y neges digyaw y neb y bo y neges wrthaw nae frawdwr; ny bydd lawen y gwrandawr wrth hynn a ddywetter wrthaw oe anfodd: ac am hynny y dyweit Selyf na ddyweit ymadrodd onyth glywir: eil peth a ddyly ef na bo na lliodic ormodd na ry foneddigeidd, eithyr na bo tra bygwyl, na thra llafar, na thra thrist, na rhy lawen, na thra gygus na thra cherthin-awc score pence along with every two kine; and in like manner for nine kine, and three kine, where they may be.

8. There is to be no augmentation upon saraad, except upon nine kine, and three kine, and six kine.

9. There is to be no augmentation upon galanas, except upon nine score kine, and six score kine, and three score kine: but the saraad of a domestic of a king is four kine, and four score of silver; his galanas does not go according to his domesticity, although he should avouch a right, independent of it, to something else, on account of his father, or his chief of kindred, or his brother.

10. The saraad of a domestic of a breyr is three kine, without augmentation; but his galanas is to be augmented. Why so? Thus it is: according to the privilege of his chief of kindred, or his father, or his brother it is paid, and that is to have an augmentation thereon; and that is higher than domesticity, since nobody can be a domestic but during his life; and more just is it to adhere to the highest in privilege and the chiefest. And so it is said, concerning the foetus of a woman, it is more proper to judge and claim as a male, than as a female; since it cannot be known what it may be, whether a male, or a female.

11. Three things which a pleader, or an advocate, is to do: to speak in a moderate tone, so that he may not be too loud, nor too low, lest he should offend; for Aristotle says, that the intermediate ought to be chosen: it is not right for anybody, in seeking his errand, to offend the person of whom the errand is to be obtained; nor his judge; for, he who is to listen will not be pleased with what shall be spoken to him adverse to his feeling: and, therefore, Solomon says, Speak not, unless thou art listened to: the second thing which he ought to study is, that he be not passionate overmuch, nor too conceited, and that he be not overbearing, nor too loquacious, nor over serious, nor over merry, nor too frowning, nor too much given to laugh

12. Three days whereon there is to be no swearing nor oath as to land: on any of the blank days, whichever it may be; and Sunday, because of its being a day for prayer; and Monday, as the relic is to be procured.

13. Three things not to be redressed; a thought; a frown; and an intent unaccompanied by act.

14. Three things which are to be confined: a man, for an act to which confine-

XXI. [AM ARDDELW.]

i. Tri defnydd y sydd reit y henwi yn enwedig: arddelw; a cheitwat; a thyst.

ii. Tri lle nyt rheit y neb henwi y arddelw: pan fo gwraic feichiawc wedi marw y gwr ac yn ceissyaw y gyrry or ty, hi a geiff oet wrth y beichyogi; canys y harddelw y bot yn feichyawc ar fab ac ny ellir y henwi yn y fedyddyer ef; eil lle caffo dyn oet wrth borth y wneuthur cyfreith nyt rheit y henwi; rheit hagen henwi pa bellet fo; ardelw yw pob dyn a ddywetto dros arall yny dadleu a hynny a fydd rheit y dasodyawc ac yw y weith, a roi colli a chael yn y ben.

ment shall pertain; a beast, for damaging corn, or hay; and a bird, in the case where it shall be fitting.

15. Three things which the lord is to listen to: a just claim; a just defence; and a just petition.

16. Three things which neither a lord, nor a judge, is to listen to: a claim contrary to law; a claim which the law has previously investigated; and a claim in respect to which there has been previously a compromise between the plaintiff and the defendant.

17. There are three discharges of recognizance in a cause: a counter-swearing; an arwaessaf; and idiocy: since there is no obligation then to answer.

18. Three cases wherein denial and confession are of the same effect: where a raith shall fail, in respect to a claim that is preferred; where guardians shall fail, in respect to a claim of theft; and the third case is proof.

XXI. [OF ARDDELW.]

1. Three matters which need to be particularly named: an arddelw; a guardian; and a witness.

2. Three cases where there is no need for any one to name his arddelw: when a pregnant woman, after the death of her husband, is sought to be driven from the house, she has time according to her condition; for her arddelw is, that she is pregnant of a son, which cannot be named until it be baptized; second, where a person shall have time for aid to fulfil the law, there is no need to name it; he is, nevertheless, to say how far it may be; every person who shall speak for another in a cause is an arddelw, and that it is necessary for an advocate to do, and is his occupation, and loss or gain is entrusted to him.

3. Three arddelws which accord with denial: an arddelw of an established raith; an arddelw of custody of guests unimpeached; and an arddelw of innocency, according to justice and country.

4. Three arddelws which comprize confession: an arddelw of arwaessaf, and failing the party; an arddelw of innocence, and undergoing a raith, and it failing, that is equivalent to confession; and an arddelw of custody of guests, and it failing, the claim is confessed.

5. Three arddelws which comprize neither denial nor confession: an arddelw of law, or justice, that the claim is not to be answered, and declaring the cause; an arddelw of proved privilege, so that a defendant shall not be bound to answer;

and an arddelw of lack of privilege on the claimant's part, so that he ought not to be answered, or of his being exceptionable by law.

6. Three cases where a claimant and a defendant assign their arddelw to the same mouth : one, in the mouth of an acknowledged surety ; the second is, in the mouth of a judge, as to how the judgment was pronounced ; third, in the mouth of a lord, of there having previously been an adjudication as to the cause which is under discussion.

7. Three cases where a person places himself as an arddelw : one is, to swear to his property, and to preserve his ownership of his own ; the second is, a defendant proving birth and rearing of an animal by himself ; the third is, proving custody before the loss of his property, and that it went not from his arddelw.

8. Three places a defendant puts his arddelw in the hands of the claimant, and if his arddelw fail him, let him prove against him through legitimate evidences. One is, where the plaintiff sues for a thing as obtained surreptitiously, or anything similar, and the defendant say, that he had his will and desire to remove what he is suing for ; if the property be absent that shall be claimed, let him prove it, if there shall be a denial thereon. Second, if the defendant said that the claimant took the property, which he claims from him, also surreptitiously ; and that he is not to answer, until the property be returned to him ; or because that the property is not in his possession ; whilst that may be like confessing the taking of the property previously by surreption, here the defendant is putting the arddelw in the mouth of the plaintiff, of his removing the property from him ; and let him prove it, if he deny. The third is, when a person claims property of another : ' God knows,' says the defendant, ' thou hast given me the property, which thou art claiming ; and there are for me enow who know it, if thou deniest it.' Here he is putting his arddelw in the mouth of the claimant. If the claimant say, when the defendant proceeded, as above, in respect to the second arddelw, of the property having been removed from him away again : ' God knows,' says the claimant, ' I deny not my removing such and such from thy possession lawfully, as payment for another thing which was my due from thee ; and, if thou deny it, there are for me enow who know it.' Here the claimant puts an arddelw in the mouth of the defendant lawfully.

9. Three things are necessary to be lawfully made, before any one shall be adjudged as losing, or gaining, in the presence of an upright judge : a complaint ; a summons ; and a demand ; that is, a declaration ; for who ever over demands in the extent of his claim, as in the law is established the worth of every animal, and saraads, [and utensils,] and galanases.

10. Three stays of appraisement : one is, where a person shall seek to appraise an animal, an ox, or a cow, or a horse, that has passed its prime, for so much as when it was in its prime, and fairly it is not then of the same worth as formerly ; unless the owner swear that it is worth so much and so much, and that he might have that sum for it, and in that manner appraise it : the second is, seeking to appraise an animal, before attaining its due age, at its lawful worth ; such as the summer pig of a sow, or a calf before it be cast ; the law will not suffer such to be appraised so high as the lawful worth, for that is premature profit ; and it does not acquire lawful worth, until the period it ought to be brought forth ; and this is the second stay : the third stay of appraisement is, a person seeking to appraise an animal after it has had a limb cut off with a weapon, or after a wolf, or a dog, has mangled it, as of the same worth as when it was whole ; and which he cannot do : since a driblet is not of lawful worth.

11. Three cases where there is to be complete payment after complete swearing : one is, for corn contiguous to a hamlet that shall be damaged ; let the people make an oath of non-recognition, that they have not damaged it ; and for all that, let them pay for the corn : second, for a bullock that shall be killed while impounded in a fold ; if it be killed, let every owner of a bullock that shall be there, make his oath as to his own bullock ; yet, notwithstanding, let them pay, by number, beast with beast, that shall be there, to the person : third, whoever shall confess the delivery of property to him to keep ; if it be lost, let him make his oath of his being clear of the property ; yet, for all that, let him pay for the property that was delivered to him.

12. Three things which liberate a defendant from a claim : a judgment ; a lawfully established arddelw ; and a verdict.

13. There are three judgments : a conclusive judgment, between a claimant present and a defendant present, which liberates the defendant for ever from that claim : for, the law will not re-do what it does : the second is, a judgment in absence ; that is not conclusive until the defendant shall appear to answer; because that lawful excuses will invalidate the judgment: third, a judgment, which shall be pronounced by a judge, between a claimant present and a defendant present, and one of the parties mutually pledge with him; the judgment will remain dubious, until it shall be scrutinized by judges.

14. There are three arddelws: an arddelw that shall take a thing out of the hand of a defendant, and set him free from the claimant; an arddelw of innocence, and to which pertains a raith, or the custody of guests; and an arddelw of a surety.

15. There are three verdicts: the verdict of a lord between his two men, or of one of the nine persons whose word is to be believed individually; the verdict of a written process between two judges who shall mutually pledge; and the verdict of a country for the arrangement of a claim to which there shall be none similar in law.

16. Three things which accord in respect to a claim, where there shall not be a raith, or arddelw, or verdict of country, or briduw, &c.: it is, where there shall be guardians; or evidences; or incompetent witnesses; that is, witnesses which the law excepts; and those are, one dumb, or deaf, or too young, or blind, or similar, or an idiot.

17. Evidences are objected to in the three ways that a person's words are rejected, or as being without privilege: a guardian before swearing; an evidence, and a witness, after swearing, are to be objected to; the person of an evidence shall be objected to, for his deed; so likewise a witness; a guardian shall have his privilege and words discredited; the blind, the dumb, and the deaf, shall be excepted, by law, on account of their infirmities; and a wife against a husband; and an idiot, as not endowed with reason; a youth, from defect as to age: therefore it is said, that law comprizes no defect.

18. Three cases where a person not the owner of the property prosecutes: in a suit as to surety; where a man proceeds as a principal, in respect to accessaries; and a person who shall get a competent information against another.

19. Three cases where the lord is not to dispense gratuitously from his throne: one is, in respect to the accessaries, when the nine score pence accrue to him, for allowing a denial to the defendant; the second is, where it shall be asserted of a person that he has committed homicide, without proof against him, and without lawful proceeding, except by the lord in examining, then the person is to pay ten shillings to the lord, for allowing him his raith; third, in respect to fixing of boundaries between cantreys, or cymwds; or when a person shall pass where homicide is committed, although he may not defile his hand in the blood, let him pay nine score pence to the lord, for allowing a denial by the oaths of a hundred men.

20. Three cases wherein there is pleading after judgment: when there shall be mutual pledging with a judge in respect to the judgment he shall pronounce; when a person conforms to the law, after a contempt, and proving a lawful excuse for himself, and the claimant endeavouring to frustrate him; third, when there shall be a contention between two persons, in respect to a judgment: 'Why, it has been decided for me,' says one: 'To me then it was,' says another.

21. Three things which are not to be done by any further of kin than a second cousin: to pay saraad with such as shall have nothing of their own to pay; and pay cattle without surety, with the son of an alltud by a Cymraes beyond the third kin; to mutually uphold, or keep, each other's share with property and oath by those beyond second cousins, for [land] is not to be shared further.

22. Three cases where a kindred pays not a galanas along with a relative: where a person shall kill his brother, for not sharing his patrimony with him; the second is, where a murderer shall refuse to conform to law with a kindred; third, where the party himself shall confess to homicide, without a previous denial, and undergo a raith.

23. Three things which the law enjoins to every body: to lead his life morally; and that he cause no vexation, or abasement, to another; and to render to every one what is his due.

24. Three causes which render it advantageous to use Latin: first, that the law might be explained to the pope, lest it should be in opposition to the law of the church, so as to obscure it; the second one is, to guard against its being understood by every body; because many things may be in writing which it may not be proper should be heard, and yet they may be necessary; the third is, to procure for such as shall understand it, in Latin, superior respect, compared with a laic; because it has been, on that account, said in the book, whatever judge is acquainted with the three columns of law, and the other particulars, called the rudiments of judicature, shall never give place to a laic.

LAWS, II.

25. There are three things more effective than a summons : the first is, where a judge shall appoint a set day for parties to appear, with their essentials present, or a set day for loss and gain, and that no one shall come, or one [of one party] only ; then he is bound to cast the party who shall not come, if the parties be admitted to have been previously bound, and have conformed to law, in the presence of a lord ; second, a contract, because it has been made [with the consent] of the [parties ;] the third [is] gorfodogaeth.

26. There are three sorts of services which it is necessary for the priest of the household to do in court : one is, to expunge every cause that has been determined, as it may be proper ; the second is, to record in writing every cause as it has been determined ; the third is, to be unintoxicated, and ready to execute letters for the king, when he may demand them, and to read them ; and for every letter patent for landed property, prepared by him, where the king shall grant register land, he is to have four pence.

XXII. [OF BONDS.]

1. There are three bonds : a suretiship, a contract ; and a briduw : hire and exchange are appropriately proceeded for by one of these ways.

2. A gift, a loan, a deposit, and what is borrowed, can be sued for, and the most part of the above particulars, through surety, and contract-men, or briduw ; and, if the briduw be acknowledged, the one who made the briduw [is to return] as to what amount it may be ; as an acknowledged surety for debt, as to what amount he is surety for.

3. Three kinds of bonds which one person enters into with another : a mutual bond, and that is a [complete] bond ; an incomplete bond ; and a futile bond.

4. There are three lawful mutual bonds : suretiship ; contract ; and briduw.

5. There are three incomplete bonds, which are the three slip suretiships, since those only bind one of the parties : [the] debtor ; the payer ; or the surety.

6. The three futile bonds are the three futile suretiships ; and they are futile on account of its being obligatory to restore them : Why are they restored ? On account of its being an unlawful [act] for any one to retain uncertified property in his possession ; or that the bond is insecure [since] there has not been a bond on both sides given for the property ; or for accepting [such kind of] surety as cannot be a surety ; to wit, a wife, or the like. is it said that a contract will annul law? It is thus: a contract whereby harm and loss can be shown as done to any one, if done by the party, such as the killing of a person, or other atrocious act, such a contract will not annul law, but the law will cause that contract to be annulled. A contract, however, from which no harm can be shown, if entered into, [as] if there were given by a man a wife to another man, by law the giver is to pay her amobyr; if the man, however, who shall be the giver, covenants for her herself, or for another to pay her amobyr, there is a contract that annuls law; for there the contract prevails over justice.

7. Three lawful things the most extraordinary which one person shall do for another, without thanks to him, without the law compelling him, and yet bearing with him after doing it, and awaiting his coming to do it: one is, being surety for another; the second is, being evidence and proof for another; third, the becoming an arwaesav of theft in hand.

8. There are three diverse causes why it is extraordinary for a person to become surety for another.

9. One is, a surety is imprisoned instead of him for whom he becomes bound, as well for the claimant, as for the debtor; and this is such an instance: where there shall be pledges in a suit for land and soil, until the claim shall be decided.

10. The second cause is, a surety must take the first three cudgel strokes, instead of him for whom he becomes surety, and that is for securing the person he becomes surety to, and conveying him safely; the law does not, however, require him to fight, nor to avenge his wrong, nor his own saraad; it, however, requires him to protect the property, that shall be attached for the plaintiff; and let him, if he receive saraad, complain to a lord, and he will not be unavenged, for wrong done to him, in becoming surety: and the law of Howel says, that no one is to fail to another.

11. The third cause is, gorfodog, which is, a surety for a person's coming to answer to a reputed charge; and unless the person comes to the appointment, without he obtain the delay allowed to a gorfodog to seek him, or take a surety from him, for [absolving him] from the charge, let him pay himself, as the law shall adjudge: for a [civil suit,] he is not called a gorfodog, but [a surety.]

12. The second thing that one person does for another is, one who becomes [evidence;] for one of the objections to proof

13. The third wonder that a person does is, becoming an arddelw to another for theft, as to which he is unable to get an arddelw to take the thing also out of his hand, and [for which] he may be hanged [as a thief,] without thanks.

14. There are three releases for a defendant, without confession, from the bond of a suit at law: counter-swearing, that is undergoing a raith after a lawful prosecution; the second is, an arwaessav; third, idiotcy.

XXIII. [OF OATHS.]

1. There are three kinds of lawful oaths: a complete oath; a loose oath; and a futile oath.

2. There are three kinds of complete oaths in law: swearing to truth through and through; the second is, denying falsehood through and through; thirdly, doubt: a perfect oath means complete swearing.

3. Three persons who are to make a perfect oath: the owner of property, in claiming; a defendant, in denying; with the oath of one of their agents. Nothing can ever be decided between one and the other, without a lawful oath at first, by one of the two parties; except where there shall be an acknowledged surety in the outset; who is to return what his suretyship is; unless one of the two parties mind to doubt him: if he so mind, however, he is to swear that what he says is true; and that after the deposition. Why is it not previous to a deposition, that a witness, or an evidence, is objected to, and that a surety is denied before deposing for what he is surety, and each one of them being a witness as to what he may see; since a surety is one of the nine persons whose word is to be credited apart? Behold wherefore: objecting before the time is one of the three vain words; that is, objection is of no force before an oath; nevertheless, the law says, not that denial is one of the three vain words, since denying and objecting are not of like character, and do not pertain to the same thing; for, when a person shall deny a surety, he denies when he shall be presented as a surety, with his lips to the relic, alternately, as he is pressed. If the objection succeed not, he stands confessed; and then he cannot be denied. If his denial fail, he is not a surety. Vain, however, is what may be said by an evidence, by word of mouth, unless he swear to the extremity, any more than another individual of the people; but, when he does swear, so far as shall be put in his mouth, here he becomes an evidence, unless he be objected to; and although the law shall suffer him to be objected to, from the lawful causes, because not credible against that person; yet peradventure he spoke truth, however, although he could not be a witness in this case.

4. By three modes is a perfect oath: the first is, swearing over a relic; the second is, swearing in the receptacle of the relics, upon pleadings, which shall be in a church-yard.

5. There are three doubtful oaths: the oath of a judge that he does not recollect how he pronounced a judgment that shall be disputed; therein it is pertinent to say that he knows not immediately, until his recollection comes to him; therefore, he is to have time, by his making an oath, as not knowing to what conclusion he arrived: that is not to be sworn, however, on a day appointed for loss and gain; but he is then to declare, without hesitation, his judgment, and to what point it was adjudged, or to forfeit a camlwrw. The second is, the oath of a surety: he is not, however, to have time, if a surety, to recollect as to a deposition; since there is no time for deposition, but calling to mind what it is. Third, a time of nine days for a lord, for calling to mind, what it was, whether as a witness between his two men, or not a witness, and the steward swearing for him, that it comes not into his recollection; or a priest, until he can first chaunt mass; and although it might be doubtful to these persons as to the recollection, the oath is perfect, if they swear.

6. A perfect oath may happen many ways besides: one is the oath of an absolver; and a counter-swearing, where a raith shall be proper.

7. A counter-swearing is never appropriate after the oath of an absolver; because the oath of an absolver is to compensate or to deny.

8. There is to be no counter-swearing, except where there shall be a raith; for the oath of an absolver is by agreement; that is, leaving him to his oath.

LAWS, II.

XXIV. HERE FOLLOWS OF A LAWFUL LOOSE OATH.

1. There are three lawful loose oaths, and which have the force of an oath. One is, the oath of a father, between two sons by one mother, where he has no share in the thing sworn to; and that is, where there shall be contention between them [as to any thing,] and left to him: if he swear to God, who created him, and who created them through him, that the testimony is true which he bears, he is credible.

2. The second is, the oath of a fellow thief; the oath that he makes is, by the death which he is to undergo, of his testimony being true. What if it be a woman? That her testimony is right, whatever woman she may be, whether a widow, or married. Wherefore does the law say, that her word is of no effect against a man? Well does it say, that her word is of no effect, whilst she be living; except between her two sons, being twins, claiming the privileged tyddyn, to ascertain which is the eldest, which the youngest of them: her word here is effective, as she has the same privilege as a thief.

3. The third loose oath is the oath of a woman, in extremity, to her confessor, in leaving a son to a man of the parish: the oath she is to make is, to swear that she has brought forth a snake, if any father begot it, but the man to whom she is leaving him, on her bed of sickness. If the man die, to whom a son is so left, and the woman likewise, and the son himself consider him as his father, and offer himself to the kindred of his father; it is not necessary for the kindred to deny him, or to receive him, or to pay on his account for any kind of illegality, until the priest shall bring forward testimony, as to what the woman said to him. If he bear witness to that effect, the kindred are obliged either to deny him lawfully, or to receive him lawfully: and there is the disposition to which a parish priest is competent to bear testimony.

4. Three things which cannot be accomplished without perjury: a raith, as there is a charge in the outset, and a denial after the charge; and the retaking property given; and the denying of truth and justice.

5. Three persons who are to verify their claim, or to defend it: one is, a claimant; the second is, a defendant; [the third is, a witness, whom a defendant] instructs to make him innocent, or whom a claimant instructs as to the extent of his claim: and such are evidences, or guardians, or witnesses, or a raith. Wherefore? Every one is to swear in the outset of the essentials, when exhibited; since no one is to convey property to another, and he himself rejecting it, or without saying it is his due.

6. In three ways a person loses his cause, however good may be his matter: by relinquishing his situation, after previously possessing it; and by living testimony adduced against him; or, that he will not act in law.

7. In three ways shall a claimant obtain the measure of his claim from a defendant present: one is, by obtaining living testimony against him; the second is, in proving through evidences by the claimant the measure of his claim; the third is, by the failure of essentials on the part of the defendant.

XXV. [OF THEFT.]

1. In what manner can a person be laid hold of, having two things stolen in his possession? It is necessary to proceed as to one first; if one be adjudged against him, he is not then to answer to any one, after that decision; for he is dead; and the dead ought not to be despoiled: because [he owns nothing] here.

2. In what manner if a thief be a fugitive? [If the thing stolen be] found in his house, the lord has a right to take whatever goods he may find in the house; since it is a halog-dy; and although it might not be a halog-dy, the owner of the house is a fugitive: and the lord is entitled to the goods of a fugitive.

3. No one is to be executed where a camlwrw shall pertain, for theft and camlwrw do not accord.

4. No one is to be banished but for the lord's share, and not on account of a claiming party. First, however, the defendant is to do justice to the claimant, and the judge is to require him to do that; if he do so, let him require him to give surety for the penalty the law may adjudge for the illegality he committed; if he cannot do it, let him be banished; if he can and willeth not to do it, he is to suffer the law of disobedience, that is, to be spoiled and detained, until he shall will, in the king's prison: and so ■ person that will not answer.

5. Many various persons, however, escape hanging although found with theft in hand: one is, ■ youth under fourteen years of age: the second is, a tonsured clerk by the privilege of ordination, and, if he so avouch, let the lord take all his goods, for he is a fugitive from law, he shelters himself under the church's protection: he is not to benefit by law since he does not conform to law: third, a pauper who shall traverse three trevs, with nine inhabited houses in each tref, without receiving alms, or entertainment, although found with stolen provision for food, less than a burden, is free: fourth, a wife jointly with her husband found with theft in hand, for the husband is the head, and if he be hanged, she is not to be hanged: if the wife, however, be taken for the theft, [let her say,] that the goods belong to her married husband, and let her call him as an arwaesav or arddelw, for she cannot legally keep the goods either by birth and rearing, or custody before loss, and the husband alive, according to the kind of goods and according to the nature of the property; and, unless it be one of the three peculiars of a woman, the husband's house is a halog-dy, for the theft committed by the wife.

6. Whoever commits the theft, if it be found under the same lock, and the same roof, as a man, unless he can account for it lawfully, or have an arddelw to take it from his hand, it is a halog-dy.

7. A person, likewise, one of whose beasts shall be killed in the court, before the termination of his cause, is not to lose his life by law.

8. There is neither dirwy, nor death, on account of a tree without work thereon, that is, a tree without cut, or chipping, upon its butt, or its top, whether [it be] green or dry. For a tree the bond of a building, however, or wrought, a person is to be executed, if stolen; for the punishment of theft does not pertain for building on the land of another person by stealth, nor for stripping his trees by stealth, nor for ploughing his land by stealth. What pertains there to that? A camlwrw, if detected. What, if he deny it? Proving by evidences; and, if the proof succeed, a camlwrw.

XXVI. [HERE ARE THE STAYS TO SWEARING.]

1. Some say, that a person can swear to his property, wherever he may see it, in every case; it only accords, however, to swear to what shall be taken by stealth, or surreption, or violence, and seen in the hand of the defendant.

2. A denial is not admissible after swearing, and for this reason; where a thing shall be sworn to, one of three things will be necessary, either keeping by birth and rearing, or custody before loss, or arddelw.

3. A borrowed article cannot be sworn to; because the thing given as borrowed cannot be had back, but something similar, of equal value.

Hefyt sef yw treis da a ddycer yngwydd ar na watter; a hwnnw yna ny wahanwyd ac ef yn y wydd ac am hynny ny eill ef na damdwng hwyn na chwynaw am danaw.

vii. Os o ledrat y collir da a rodder yn atneu, rheit fydd yr hawlwr tyngu nas gwahanws dim ay dda eithyr lledrat os gwyl; ac ny ddichawn na bo anudon iddaw tyngu hynny canys y adaw yn atneu gan y neb y ducpwyd a wnyth ef; ac ny allei ynteu hefyd dwyn y da y gan y neb y rhoddassai attaw eithyr oy fodd ay ganyat hyt yr amser terfynded y dyliei y ddwyn. 4. A lent article cannot be sworn to, on account of its not [being stolen,] although it be seen in the hand of the defendant; except a weapon, which must be sworn to; and, unless detained, there is neither dirwy nor punishment on its account: if, however, a complaint be made for detaining it, let it be proceeded for according to its nature.

5. Who can swear to a thing which he shall deliver as a deposit to another, if lost, or sue for it, if it be lost through violence? No one can sue for the robbery but the person robbed; for one of the ways whereby a suit for violence loses its character is, by complaining of a thing taken by violence from another, and not from himself; thence there is a camlwrw, because no one can complain of violence but the one robbed: violence is saraad; and no one can sue in a plaint for saraad instead of another, and he himself able to appear to sue, and of lawful age.

6. Why is it lawful for a married woman, who is under bondage to another, to appear and sue on her own behalf, for her saraad, and it not being necessary nor right for her to sue in any other case but this only? And, on that account, the person who had the property in his custody can swear, that nobody could either sell it, or give it, or exchange it, whilst in his possession, and until its time should come, if it had been given into keeping until a time, for he is to answer for it when it shall be claimed by the owner. Further, violence is, property taken in the presence of one, and not denied; and that has not been separated from him in his presence; and, therefore, he cannot swear to it, or complain concerning it.

7. If property, given as a deposit, be lost through theft, it is necessary for the claimant to swear, that nothing separated his property from him, except theft, if he see it; and there cannot be otherwise than perjury for him to swear that, for he left it as a deposit with the person it was taken from; and he could not, likewise, take the property from him into whose possession he had delivered it, except by his will and permission, until the stipulated time he ought to take it. And, therefore, the true owner of this property [cannot sue for it,] as some of the judges say; the law, however, says, that the true owner of the property can sue for his property where-soever he may see it, and at what time soever he may see it; unless the law shuts between him and his property, and it becomes a ridiculous claim, or any thing similar; and, if it be so, no one can either claim it, or swear to it.

8. There is no true owner of this property, whilst he shall place it as a favour with a guardian, or deliver the property to him to keep; for an article borrowed, and a deposit, and an article lent, are like a favour; and, therefore, they cannot be sworn to in the hand to which they may be given: yet, however, the true owner can swear to his property; since no one can be hindered from suing upon any claim he may will; and according to the method of his suing he is to be answered.

9. If the property be present, swearing is proper; and then the defendant is entitled but to one of the three shields: custody before loss; or custody by birth and rearing; or arwaesav. If by arwaesav he take his arddelw, let the arwaesav take the property in his hand.

10. What if the guardian then take the property into his hand and say, when it is sworn to: 'God knows,' says he, 'I ought not to answer thee, as to this claim; for the cause is unlawful as to the property that thou art claiming, and swearing to, in my hand; that is, as a deposit thou hast delivered it into my hand; and a deposit cannot be sworn to; and, if thou shalt deny that, there are for me enow who know it, and who saw it delivered to me; and to the law I appeal, that I am not to answer for theft, in respect to a present confessed deposit.'

11. 'God knows,' says the claimant, 'I testify to the judge, and the gwrdas, of thy having answered; and that thou hast not given a lawful denial in thy answer; and, if thou wert to give it, thou couldst not give a denial concerning theft in hand, except under one of the three lawful shields: taking the [property from its lawful custody requires in defence an arwaesav as a] lawful arddelw, so as to exonerate him from answering concerning theft in hand; because it is a sufficient arddelw to a thief, with theft in his hand, an arwaesav taking the theft upon him, in the presence of the session, and [so freeing] him from the claim, as not to be obliged to answer; since two persons are not to be chastised for one illegality; for the one who took it is to lose his life, unless he be able to cast the illegality from him: and call for judgment.'

12. Says the claimant, 'I maintain, that thou hast not denied.' And there the law sees, since he has not made use of one of the three lawful shields, that he is to restore the property in the condition it has been claimed, and make the amends which the law adjudges with respect to confessed theft in hand, according to the lawful worth that is upon the property.

13. In what manner shall a thing, that has not an ear, be sworn to? For the law requires, if it be an animal, that the right ear of the animal be taken in the left hand of the person, having the right hand upon the relic. There is no ear to a bird; how is it possible then to swear to it? The hand can be placed upon its head; and if a tame fowl, then swear there was no true owner of it, other than himself; if a wild fowl [such as] a hawk, or a sparrow-hawk, to swear to it by its qualities; [and that no other person was the] true owner to it. Then the person is to give one of the three answers: birth and rearing; or custody before loss; or arwaesav. If of birth and rearing; he is to swear, along with guardians, when [caught] he made it, from being wild to become tame, and did [rear it;] the guardians are to swear to knowing of its birth, and seeing it reared. There is to be no penalty for this to the lord, except a camlwrw.

14. Some say, that the relics of a church cannot be sworn to, nor its books, nor its elements, as not belonging to anybody, but to the church; the law, however, says, that the parsons and the priests can swear to them; because they are owners of the church and its property, in the same manner as a husband is of his lawful wife.

15. What if there be relics in the custody of laics and taken, who then is to swear to them? The true owners, as thou hast heard above, as to a deposit, that shall be taken from a conservator.

16. What if an alltud lose property, and his lord claim it, and seek to swear to it? He is competent to do so; because it is a joint property to him and his alltud.

17. What if the property of a bondman be stolen, and the lord see it, and claim it, is he to swear to it? Some say, that it is to be sworn to; because [the property of the bondman is the property of the lord; the law] says, that whatever way [the property be lost of a bondman of a] lord, and his lord should see the property, [he himself leaving it, and it taken] by another, that claiming it is proper by a [lawful arddelw: for which there is a] pleading concerning it in law.

18. If a bondman [steal any thing] there is an established raith for the theft; a raith is not pertinent where swearing is to be, and, therefore, it is not to be sworn to. Is there to be a raith, and it in hand, or

And then the defendant is to have a relic to deny; and, if he have not, let him lose in the manner that the claimant has charged against him; and let him deny the theft entirely three times; and then the judge is to direct an established raith upon him, according to the amount of the theft, whether it be a back burden, or what may be less than a burden load; or a horse load; or the worth of three score pence, or what may be less than that, or what may be more than that; within a week from the next Sunday, where he takes his mass bread, and his holy water; and, in that manner, for every

12. The oaths of five persons nearest in worth to the denier, and the half nod-men, and the other half not nod-men, two on behalf of his father, and two on the part of his mother, and he himself the fifth, the foremost to swear, he and every denier: and there there are two co-equals on the part of the father and the mother.
13. The kind of oath to be made by the raith is to be similar to that by the denier himself; and so every raith.
14. Those who are nearest in worth are such as are so near as to pay galanas, and to receive it [if pertinent.]
15. To deny a horse load, or an ox, that is worth three score pence, or the worth of three score pence, [there are to be] the oaths of seven persons, nearest in worth, and the half nod-men, &c.
16. From three score pence to six [score] pence the oaths of seven persons nearest; others say twenty-four, by the law of Howel.
17. From six score pence to one pound, the oaths of the twelve persons nearest; some say, the oaths of forty-eight persons, by the law of Howel, of nod-men and not nod-men, in two parts.
18. So in respect to [property,] except in respect to alltuds only, and in thirds for the worth of one pound; and if it be beyond, the oaths of twenty-four men nearest, &c.
19. A raith does not extend beyond that, unless [there be] a lawful view of theft; [and a] married woman is not to make an oath; but she can prosecute the taking the property she may have, like another [person.]
20. To deny less than a back burden, the oaths of six persons nearest [in worth.]
21. There are five kinds of theft not present: in one there is to be a denial without raith; one where there shall be a denial with raith; one where there is to be neither denial nor raith; one for which there is to be an arddelw, or guardians; and one where there are to be guardians against it, and no arddelw for it.
22. There are three kinds of theft against which there is to be a denial raith. One, if a person say of another that he has stolen, and demand of him lawfully the oath of an absolver; he is neither to avoid nor fail as to an oath; and if he fail, and proof be called, the person shall have the extent of his claim against him who shall fail in the oath, as a punishment; since the oath of an absolver is not to be avoided, as to theft. Another, where there shall be one, who is not an owner of the property, saying, and imputing it as an accusation against another, and confirming it by the relic, which is more; there is required only the oath of the defendant to deny the charge made by the one who is not the owner of the property; if his denial fail, [he is to pay] three pounds. Third, if the owner of the property charge theft by word of mouth against another; if the person do not deny that, [he pays] three pounds; because there is to be only a dirwy, although it be confessed by the person, since it is not in his hand, being without competent information, and without confession by a fellow thief under the gallows.

Thus far has been spoken concerning theft absent, for which there is to be a denial, without raith.

XXVIII. FURTHER OF THEFT FOR WHICH THERE ARE TO BE BOTH DENIAL AND RAITH.

1. And this may happen by three means. One is, if the owner of property charge another with stealing it, be the quantity ever so much, or ever so little, from one penny onwards, without finding it in hand, and the accused declaring his innocence; if his raith fail, there being nothing found in hand, the dirwy is to be three pounds; although there may be an increase of the raith, according to the magnitude of the theft, whether a back burden, or a horse load, it may be, or the worth of sixty pence; the dirwy for theft is not to exceed three pounds, where a raith is pertinent for theft. There is, however, a case where there is not to be a raith for theft absent, as thou wilt find.

2. Second, theft for which there are to be a denial and a raith: where one who is not the owner of property shall bring an accusation of theft in this manner, by taking the foreman of the raith by the hand, in the presence of the claimant and defendant, upon silence being proclaimed in the session, and swearing to seeing him, in broad day-light, with the property, and naming it, either an ox, or a cow, &c., when the sun was as high on hill as on daie, and passing through the trev, and naming the trev and the cymwd; and that it was not for hatred, nor enmity, nor reward, nor worth he accuses of the theft, but for the sake of speaking the truth. And it is not a view, unless it be a view by two persons; that is to say, the claimant and the viewer; and the claimant is likewise to swear that, and charge the theft lawfully; and then there is to be a raith of twenty-four, so that there shall be an equal number from one cymwd like another alternately, iii. Trydydd lle y bydd gwat a rheith lle gyrrro perchennoc y da unely a oth am ledrat ac un or affeithieu lledrat o ffynna y gwat da yw o metha gwat yr affeithwr tair punt yr arglwydd.

or twenty-four from each cymwd; [if the raith fail,] the punishment is three pounds, for that nothing was found in his hand.

3. The third case where there are a denial and raith is, where the owner of the property shall charge one with theft, and one with the accessories of theft; if the denial succeed, it is well; if the denial of the accessory fail, three pounds to the lord.

Thus far has been spoken concerning theft, for which there is denial without raith, and denial with raith.

XXIX. FURTHER OF THEFT, AGAINST WHICH THERE IS NEITHER DENIAL, NOR RAITH, NOR ARDDELW.

1. To wit, where there shall be a competent information concerning theft, by the oath of a religious professor; that is, a parish priest, between his two parishioners. That person loses not his life; since no one is to lose life or limb, through the word of another, without further testimony against him; he is, however, liable to pay seven pounds, the worth of a thief.

2. The second theft absent, against which there is neither denial, nor raith, nor arddelw, is, where a fellow thief to be hanged shall confess theft against his companion, having the withy about his neck and hopeless of life, for what shall be worth four legal pence; for which theft seven pounds are due to the king. It is necessary, however, for those two thefts to be of as much worth as the theft for which the criminal is to be hanged; but they are not to be hanged, because nothing is found in hand.

3. The third case where there is to be neither denial, nor raith, nor arddelw, is in respect to a notorious thief, or a banished thief, or a fugitive being an acknowledged thief.

4. A notorious thief is a bondman, who for the first time of his stealing is to pay six score pence; the second time, one pound; the third, a limb to be cut off; from thenceforth he is a notorious thief; and, therefore it is said, notoriety hangs.

5. Is the complainant for property to have from a thief who shall be banished property found upon him in his flight? To the lord belongs the whole of the property; for he has become a fugitive.

6. Is a fellow thief to be hanged, if there be no complainant? He is not to be hanged.

7. A thief that shall be banished by the sentence of law, whether for a dirwy, or for the theft of a fellow thief

8. A thief, when he shall be found in the country the third time, shall be hanged.

9. A fugitive, when found, after being sought after three nights in his usual abode, and captured against his will, is to lose his life; and to be despoiled likewise.

10. Here further is spoken of theft absent, against which an arddelw, or guardians, are obtained; to wit, theft that can be sworn to when absent, from a part of it; such as where the skin of an animal shall be found, by the colour and mark of which its owner may swear to it; and where the thief may not be fully able to clear himself, it will be necessary for him to procure guardians, to insure, along with him, that the animal to which the skin belonged was his, either by custody before loss, or by the birth of the animal and the rearing of it, or an arwaesav that shall take the stolen skin out of his hand; and unless he get that, he loses his life; and that for theft absent; since the whole of the animal is not in hand: and part is not the whole.

XXX. HERE IS FURTHER OF THEFT ABSENT, FOR WHICH AN ARDDELW IS NOT HAD, AND AGAINST WHICH GUARDIANS ARE TO BE HAD, THAT IS, THEFT ABSENT WHICH SHALL BE IMPUTED TO A PERSON.

1. 'God knows,' says he then, 'on such and such a night, thou art charging the theft upon me, there are for me enow of lawful guardians to clear me from illegality out of such and such a house; to wit, the owner of the house.' He is to clear him, swearing with the men of the house to putting a hand three times in the night [over him,] and thus clearing him from the time of securing the byres until the morning: securing the byres implies, from the time of tying the cattle until the morning.

2. Guests can only be cleared for night theft.

3. These guardians may be charged as disreputable, like others; for the disreputable cannot clear.

4. If he fail to clear the guest; three pounds to the lord, and his property to the complainant.

2. No one beyond second cousins are to share with one another, or to guard each other's land.

3. A nephew, the son of a second cousin, and a nephew, the son of a brother, are not to share by the law of Howel.

4. No one is to have the land of his father's second cousin, by claiming it on the part of the person who might die, that is, although he be of the same blood. If he willeth the land, let him claim by his father having formerly paid ebediw for that land, and that he ought to have his patrimony.

5. After brothers shall have shared patrimony amongst them, if one of them die without an heir of his body, or co-heir of his brothers, or of his cousins, or of his second cousins, and there be only third cousins, the lord is the heir to that land ; for no one beyond second cousins is to have land. That is called the land of him with the broadest penny. By law, the lord is not to hold the land, for he cannot be the proprietor.

6. If the lord sell such kind of land to a son while his father is alive, if the son die with an heir of his own body, his brothers, or his cousins, or his second cousins have it, and they are to pay his ebediw, although his father be alive : and that is one case in which it is paid by law. If he have no brothers, nor cousins, nor any one who is to have it by law, the father has not the land : for a due does not return.

7. Whoever shall claim such land, let him pay the ebediw [of the defunct].

8. If a nephew, the son of a brother, to a person die, however, and there be nobody related to him but his uncle, he shall have the patrimony.

9. All lands are to be shared but these : a bog ; oak wood ; and a quarry. And these erections are to be in common among brothers : an orchard ; a mill ; and a wear.

10. If the younger son should refuse to share the tyddyns as the law requires, these three lands may be seized ; but his privileged tyddyn cannot be seized, although he refuse to share the land.

11. Thus sharing is to be : first, sharing is to take place between brothers, and the youngest son to choose his tyddyn ; he is to choose, if he be an uchelwr, the homestead in which his father resided, and the buildings thereon, and eight legal erws around it; and then the youngest son is to share, and from eldest to eldest choose a tyddyn and the buildings thereon, and eight erws; and then the youngest shares the dispersed land, and let them choose from eldest to eldest, and each to have the buildings that may be on his tyddyn.

12. Second cousins are to re-share land, but no one is to move from his tyddyn, for the tyddyn is of that size that there is no need to share it, nor is any one to be a builder for another.

XXXIII. THUS IT IS AS TO A CLAIM OF EQUALITY.

1. To come to the lord and declare that he originates from such and such a trev, and require him, for God's sake, to cause justice to be done to him as to his due; and then he is to cause it to be done, and cause the register trev, in which he shall say his due is, to be cited, and when the field is entered, the claimant is to bind himself in law, and the parties are to be arranged; and then he is to state the extent of his claim, and that he originates from that trev, and from such and such a stock, and requires to be located in the trev. The trev are to answer by and put the issue in the hands of one of them, and appoint a pleader, a guider, and defendant, and mutual speaking.

2. A claim of equality only takes place in a register trev, for every one is to equalize with another, as if they were brothers.

3. The law of register land is, that no one's share is to be greater than that of another; and, therefore, there is no extinguished erw therein, for each is to have as much as another.

4. Tunc is not to be paid from register land, because supper money is not due from it.

5. Progress of dogs and horses and dovreath is to be had from it, wherefore a lord is not to have support from the register land, and there no one is to buy an erw of each other's son.

6. There a son is to have land while his father is alive, and that is the reason his brother no more shares land with him than the furthest in the trev.

7. And there the sons do not together pay their father's ebediw, but the youngest pays it, for he is to await his father's death to have land, which the others do not if they have property to rent land, and, therefore, they are not to pay their father's ebediw more than another.

8. No one on register land is to go from his tyddyn, if there be a sufficiency of land in the trev whereon to locate the claimant.

9. Neither brother nor uncle is to pay ebediw on register land except if he will to pay ebediw ; and no one pays, unless he be a son of the person himself.

10. Register land cannot be claimed but when it shall be vacant.

11. No one is to have register land from one trev to another.

XXXIII. [OF LAWFUL TIMES.]

1. Three times the law is closed against a claim for land and soil : the spring ; the harvest ; the times mentioned in law ; and the blank days.

2. Land is not to be answered for at those periods, unless it be one of the three lands as to which there is no need to await a free time : church land ; boundary ; and land between a non-proprietor and a proprietor, if the non-proprietor withhold land from him ; and, likewise, after the expiration of one hundred years no one need answer another as to land and soil, for law is closed between them, unless one of the three lawful disturbances be done : killing a person ; burning a building ; or breaking a plough.

3. Is the disturbance of burning a building, or killing a person, lawful, and the law punishing the doer if he confess ? No, for it is not lawful to kill a person. If a man, however, kill a person, he may, when the day arrives on which it shall be said that law is closed as to land, and that he is not to be answered as to his land, call to mind that he killed a person, or burnt a building, or broke a plough, in hindering the other's possession of the land ; and that he did right for it to the lord and the kindred : and that stands for him as testimony against the law closing between him and his due ; if he has proof through a lord, or through one who saw him, or through record of court or country.

4. There is no need of waiting time to share land between co-inheritors, if they be agreed.

5. If there be buildings on land to be shared, and there be unwillingness to share them ; whoever shall own the buildings may remove them without the consent of the owner of the land ; let the posts and spars be cut even with the ground, and let him depart with his building, unless he be hindered by a cross : if a cross be placed, let him resort to law ; and the law adjudges him to remove with his building, so that he do not breach the land which is not his property ; or let him complain of wrong cross in court, for that cross is wrong where nothing is worse [thereby,] for the land is no worse for transporting the building across it, so that corn, or hay, or dike be not damaged.

6. A surety is to swear concerning his suretiship, if it be doubted whether his return be right : a surety, however, has a period of three days, to recollect whether he be a surety, or not a surety ; and, if he confess his being a surety, he has a period of a fortnight to provide for payment, if he pays himself.

7. A judge has a period of nine days to recollect as to his judgment, if he be doubtful for whom he decided.

8. A maid, a thief, an abbot, and a herdsman have no time ; nor a priest but until he can chaunt mass the following morning, in his vestment.

9. This is the complement of a lawful hamlet : nine buildings, and one plough, and one kiln, and one churn, and one cat, and one cock, and one bull, and one herdsman.

XXXIV. [OF AUGMENTATION.]

1. What is the galanas of a breyr without office ? Six kine and six score kine ? The six score kine is the galanas, and the six kine is for saraad of the corpse.

2. And three score kine is the galanas of the king's taecog : and three kine is the saraad of the corpse of a taecog.

3. In what manner is the galanas, of one whose galanas and saraad require augmentation, to be augmented ? Thus it is augmented : the half of six score kine, that is three score kine, to be shared in two, that is thirty kine in each share ; then share the thirty kine in two, there will be fifteen in each share : thus the six score kine are thrice shared. Then take once half the six kine of saraad, and place it with the fifteen, that will be eighteen kine : take the third of the eighteen kine, that is six kine, and then add it to the six score kine, that is six score and six kine : the six kine is the saraad of a corpse ; for no one is killed without first suffering saraad.

4. If the person killed have a married wife, she has a third of the six kine, and the kindred the rest, in the same manner as the galanas.

5. As the galanas of a breyr without office was augmented, so augmentation takes place on the galanas of a chief of kindred and his relatives, whose galanas may be nine score and nine kine ; and the galanas of a king's taecog ; and every one whose galanas is augmented.

7. Can galanas be altogether paid with money? It can.

XXXV. [OF GUARDIANS.]

1. The teithi of a guardian are, to swear that the property belongs to the person who shall call him as a guardian, and that he parted not with it in any way by which property is separated from a person, and so ensure the property to the person; and he charges no one with evil: therefore he is not objected to as an evidence is. And, although the person be an alltud, the guardians must be privileged and respectable; and two are sufficient if they can be obtained, and less will not do: and the only objection to a guardian is as to his respectability, that is, privilege.

2. Disrespectability is, being an alltud.

3. The time to question the respectability of a guardian as to his being an alltud is, after he shall be shown in the field, prior to his being put to the relic and saying his mind: 'God knows,' says the claimant, or his advocate for him, 'thou art an alltud; and if thou deniest that, there are for me enow who know thou art so; and to the law I appeal, that the word of an alltud is not to be taken against a Cymro in Cymru or its bounds.'

4. Then the guardian himself, or his advocate for him, is to state one of the three legal arddelws: arddelw of privilege; or denial of alltudship at the same time; or demand, by law, that he is to state to whom he says that he is an alltud, and at the same time, likewise, denying alltudship.

5. If he avouch by privilege, let him say, that he is a privileged man, and has sufficient usual guardians to ensure his privilege; yet those guardians, if they be not in the field, are not to be waited for, by law, if they know it.

6. Then the claimant is to name the privilege which shall keep him, for there are various kinds of privilege; a privilege of land as a breyr, a proprietor; privilege without land, as privilege of office; privilege without land, without office, as a man taken or suffered by a kindred without reception.

7. Then he is to name the privilege that shall keep him, and, unless the privilege that he shall name be in possession, let the claimant submit to the lord that that privilege is not in his possession : and empty-hand does not ensure in law : and that it is no privilege while not in his possession.

LAWS, II.

8. If the lord fail him, his defence fails him : for there is no privilege without investiture.

9. If the guardians fail him, likewise, his defence fails, and he cannot be a guardian ; for he is a confessed alltud : and so those guardians are discredited, and also those first named.

10. If the guardian avouch by denial of alltudship without any thing further, it is then right to hear the proofs of the claimant, if they be in the field ; if they be not, they are not to be waited for. And if the guardian mind to object to that proof, thus he is to object by law. After the first evidence shall have sworn to knowing and seeing his alltudship, as an evidence is to swear, then the alltud is to say : ' I have a lawful objection against thee, so that thy word is not to be taken against me ; if thou deniest that, there are for me enow who know it.'

11. If the claimant's witness deny that, or his advocate for him, the evidence of the guardian shall be brought forward.

12. If the claimant's witness, or his advocate for him, appeal to the law that he is to name his objection, he is to do so : and there is no need to deny an objection that shall not be named, nor an illegality that shall not be named, nor a claim not named.

13. Lawful objections are : galanas for which reconciliation has not been made with a kindred ; land-feud without disposition concerning it ; and naming the galanas and the land-feud, and where they occur ; and if the lord testify that disposition has taken place of both, it is no objection ; and wife-feud, likewise, and that must be also named ; and wife-feud is no objection, unless the wife be taken by violence from him, and cohabitation take place with her at the time the testimony in law shall be given.

14. And so evidences are to be taken successively until one shall fail, and the one whose evidences shall fail, is adjudged to lose in the contention as to guardians.

15. And after that guardian shall have sworn, another is to be taken apart, and treated as the other, and so successively until the last ; and he whose guardian shall fail, loses his claim : and where two unobjectionable evidences are had, it is enough ; unless a number of evidences be promised without specifying a sufficiency ; in which case, if one fail, the whole suit falls to the ground.

16. And that law of producing evidences may continue from one period to another, and cannot continue longer for one to produce evidences; and if the law continue so long without either losing, the claimant is adjudged to lose.

17. Whoever objects to a witness, or evidence, before knowing what he shall say, and swearing to his statement; he cannot be objected to on that day in the suit on which he shall be brought.

18. If the guardian now appeals to the law, that the claimant is to name to whom he charges him to be an alltud, and also denying alltudship, it is right; and if that person be in the field, and deny that he is an alltud to him, the claimant's evidences are there nugatory: for no one is to attribute property to another which he himself disclaims.

19. If he be not in the field, he is not to be waited for; and although he may be in the field, and say that he is an alltud to him; his denial is not to be brought by the guardian, nor his proof by the claimant, until his arddelw be required that he is not his alltud, and it fail him.

20. If the claimant will to discredit the guardian, as being one of the three persons whose word is not to be taken; the claimant is thus, after he shall be named, and shown, and before he knows what he may state, to say: 'Thy word is not to be taken against me, nor against any one, whatever thou mayest say, whether bad or good,' and then he is to name one of these three, 'and if thou deniest this, there are enow who know it.'

21. Then the guardian is to say: 'I totally deny against thee and against thy knowledge that I am so.'

22. Then the judge is to ask the claimant: 'Who are thy evidences, and where are they; and they are not to be waited for, if not in the field: if they be, he is to name them and show them; and if he charge him with being a common coward, the evidence is to swear to knowing and seeing him refuse the lord and his companions three times to go with his lord upon his service, and he can object to those as mentioned, and that he was punished for it. And if he charge the guardian with a breach of faith; it is necessary to produce evidences who shall swear to knowing and seeing him giving his faith and breaking it; and he can object to them as to the others. And if he charge him with false testimony; let him swear to knowing and seeing him bear false testimony, and perjuring himself on a relic, and doing penance for it ; and he can object to them as you have heard before : only that this contention as to objecting is to continue but from one period to another.

23. If the defendant's pleader, when that guardian shall be discredited by bearing false testimony and publicly perjuring himself, then say : ' God knows,' says he, ' to the judge and the gwrda I testify, that the man thou sayest is an evidence,' naming him, ' does not perform the teithi of a legal evidence, that is, swearing to knowing and seeing the bearing false testimony in such and such a place, and committing perjury, and seeing him performing penance for that publicly ; and as he did not perform the teithi of an evidence, he is no evidence ; and as he is no evidence to the disrespectability asserted against the guardian, he is respectable, and his word efficacious, and his testimony to be taken as a guardian and his teithi : and besides there is a lawful objection between this guardian,' naming him, ' and the one thou art producing as an evidence to discredit the guardian, so that he is not to be credited,' and there naming one of the three legal objections, ' and I am calling for the admittal of my evidence by law.'

24. Then the judge is to go out, and send some to interrogate the guardian and his advocate, as hearing two defences from him : one of testifying to the judge and the gwrda that he failed in the teithi of an evidence in knowing and seeing him bearing false testimony, and seeing him performing penance ; the second, of naming a legal objection against the evidence ; and asking him which of them is his arddelw, and which of them he willeth to have admitted.

XXXVI. THESE ARE THE WAYS IN WHICH A PERSON LAWFULLY ACQUIRES PROPERTY, AND BY WHICH HE CAN LAWFULLY GUARD IT, AND BECOME THE TRUE OWNER OF IT.

1. First, if it be an animal, to guard the birth and rearing of the animal, by proving the dam to be his property, and to knowing its birth, and seeing it reared in his possession, without being out of his possession for three nights, by a sufficiency of respectable men.

2. The second is, saying that the property came to him from another in a lawful way, which he can prove, and that he has an arwaesav : if he take it from his hand, that will protect him as to illegality.

3. The third way, custody before loss, as the law says.

4. The fourth way, saying that it was from another, or exchanged with another, with settled sureties thereon ; that is sufficient, if the owner have the sureties, unless they are denied to be sureties: for there is no exchange without a surety. It is well that the owner should have sureties, or briduw, or contract-men, lest it be sought to be taken back on account of surety not being given for the dilysrwydd of the property. It is useless, however, for a non-proprietor to give surety for the dilysrwydd of property against the owner claiming it when he may see it, for the owner takes back that exchange.

5. The fifth is, the giving it by another, who shall be able to secure the property to the person in whose custody and possession it is for a length of time without disturbance, with respectable settled sureties for it; that protects the holder from the person who gave it, and from every body, if the gift be certain, and be not theft.

6. The sixth is, the property coming to the person by bequest from another, who can bequeath the property, and proving it.

7. The seventh is, saying that the property came to him by sharing, or [gift,] when he left his alltudship, and proving that.

8. The eighth is, if it be flesh, saying that it is the land-quarter [of an animal,] which he had upon his land lawfully.

9. The ninth, saying that it is one of the three lucky events of patrimony, and came lawfully to him.

10. The tenth, the person saying, that the property is with him as a pledge, or distress, which he took for a time which has expired, and that he lawfully offered it to the owner who refused it, and proving that; or as a pledge for corn damage; or as a distress for theft, or galanas which he is not to release: and although in these cases the pledge and distress are similar, there is a different understanding of each. A living person given as a pledge, is one that shall be given as to land, or at the king's pleasure.

XXXVII. THUS AN EVIDENCE IS OBJECTED TO.

1. Whoever shall produce an evidence in a suit, where such are admitted, is to swear first, that the extent of his claim is true; and, where proof is allowed to be promised, to say, that he has enow who know, if it be doubted, and if the witness be present to produce him, and let him then be put to the relic; and the witness shall not be objected to until he finish swearing to what shall be required of him, and bearing his testimony to the extremity.

the power of his oath, that he has a lawful objection against the evidence, or witness, and that he is not an evidence against him ;
and let him name a lawful cause, which are, the objections against a witness, or evidence.

3. If he object to an evidence before swearing, his objection is futile, and he loses the suit in which the objection occurs : for,

4. There are futile expressions in a session : objection before the time, that is, objecting before swearing ; denial before verdict, that is, denying the surety before he make his return, if he acknowledge his suretiship ; and pleading after judgment, for nothing can be then done but mutual pledging as to the judgment.

5. Whoever shall promise a sufficiency in law of evidences or witnesses, and some be objected to, and others stand ; if two stand it is sufficient, if they be admissible, although the more that shall stand the better : and so in a raith, more are to be brought than the law adjudges, lest some be objected to.

6. If a person promise witnesses, or evidences, or guardians, and name them thus : John and David ; and when he brings them forward puts David before John, his testimony is futile ; for he did not what he first named and promised : for it is incumbent upon every one to fulfil his promise.

7. If he promise witnesses, without naming them, as far as two, although the more the better of good ones, whatever the number of respectable ones he may chuse to produce, it is no breach of law.

8. If he promise, likewise, more evidences than he shall produce, he fails in his claim.

9. If guardians differ in their testimonies, their testimony is of no force.

10. If a person promise witnesses, or evidences, or guardians, by name, no excuse avails for them in the day of loss and gain, neither disease, nor any thing that may occur ; nor for any one on that day.

11. If a person promise as many evidences as another, he has no need of more, if he so will.

XXXVIII. [OF GALANAS.]

1. Who is to prosecute an accessory ?
A person who can complain against a murderer, by being so nearly related to a relative as to receive and do right for him.

2. In what manner does he prosecute an accessary ? As he shall prosecute galanas, by the relic thrice through legal procedure.

xvi. Paham y mae mwy rheith y wadu affeith galanas no galanas? Mwyaf y wadu

3. What has the complainant for plaint of accessory to the murder? The oath of the accessory that he mixed not in the blood of his relative, and that he did neither disgrace, nor contumely, either to him, or his kindred.

4. What if the raith fail; shall he have right if there be? He shall have no right, for no one has saraad but the one subjected to it, except where the saraad of a corpse is had.

5. Is the lord to have the nine scores, if the raiths fail, and the three pounds? He is.

6. Why? He has the nine scores for allowing the raith, and the three pounds for its failure.

7. Is there galanas without an accessory to it? There is: by killing a person with poison, for there is no shedding of blood; and there is no accessory where there is no blood; for blood and wound and [the killing of a person] are denied.

8. Why is the raith larger to deny the three last accessories than the three first? Because the nearer the accessory is to the galanas the deeper it is; for it is more to see the killing of a person and not rescuing him, than to give counsel to kill him, for it might chance that a person might not kill him although so advised, for every one ought to have judgment and distinguish good counsel from bad.

9. Is it necessary for him to prosecute an accessory to the relic? It is.

10. Can a lord prosecute an accessory himself, in his lordship, or where it is complained of; or prosecute for an idiot committed to his charge when young if he be killed? No one can claim his galanas nor accessory but a lord, for to a lord belongs what shall be rejected: and the piece of a hundred perplexities as to his own hart, for he himself, or another for him, is the complainant for it.

11. What kind of men deny a piece of a hundred perplexities? Men not nodmen, and there is no objecting to them; and he can prosecute an accessory to the hundredth hand if he sue himself.

12. A lord is not to prosecute an accessory to any one but one that shall originate from his own lordship.

13. Why does he prosecute an accessory? It is at his option.

14. Can a father complain for the killing of his son? He cannot; he is not within the grades of affinity.

15. If the affinity be denied, who proves it? His own oath together with that of his relations.

16. Why is the raith greater to deny an accessory of galanas than galanas itself?

To deny galanas is the greatest, for it is necessary to have men under vows [of refraint,] and two parts of the kindred of the father, and a third of that of the mother, of proprietors in the country in the raith; and to deny an accessory there is no need but of such men as can be had, whether on the part of the father or that of the mother as far as a fifth cousin, without regard to thirds.

XXXIX. [OF THEFT.]

1. To deny taking a dog, or bird, the oath of one man, and also where there shall be no raith; and as to releasing a thief the oath of one man if it be denied; if confessed, seven pounds.

2. If a dog, or bird, be taken, [restoration is to be made of the dog,] or the bird to the person; and nine score pence to the lord: it is not theft.

3. From a bird to a small animal, as a sow, or goat, or sheep, or calf, or back burthen; to deny stealing them, the oaths of five men nearest in worth [to the person].

4. If a charge of theft be made of less than the worth of a penny; if confessed, three pounds go to the lord: if denied, a raith according to the theft; if the raith fail, three pounds.

5. To deny the stealing a horse-load, or an ox, or the worth of three score pence, or five shillings, or any property from three score to six score pence; the oaths of seven men nearest in worth, the one half nod-men, and the other half not nod-men.

6. To deny the worth of six score pence, and from six score pence to a pound; the oaths of twelve men nearest in worth.

7. To deny a pound and upwards, or a horse-load which may be a pound or upwards in value; the oaths of twenty-four men.

8. To deny the stealing a steed; the oaths of twenty-four men.

9. A raith, although there be a charge, goes no further than twenty-four men, unless there be a view of the theft; if there be a view, there are to be the oaths of twenty-four raith-men, and the oaths of the person charged with eight men with him, making thirty-three men, from the strength of the view: a view of theft is, to assert seeing a person going through a tref in the light of day with the theft, and swearing to and proving that.

10. A married woman cannot accuse of theft; she can, however, prosecute for theft, and a raith takes place according to the nature of the theft, if she be a widow.

is necessary to deny theft to have nod-men, and to deny an accessory only such as can be had.

12. Why is there not as great a raith to deny an accessory of theft as an accessory of galanas? As galanas is weightier than theft, so it is weightier to deny an accessory of galanas than an accessory of theft; for to deny any accessory there needs only such privileged men as can be had.

13. Is there theft without an accessory? There is: the taking of a dog, or bird; although stolen, there is neither accessory, nor punishment for theft for them.

14. Can an accessory of theft be prosecuted prior to the theft? It cannot: nor any accessory prior to prosecuting the criminal.

15. Who is to prosecute theft or an accessory? The owner of the property.

16. Who shall have the accessory after he shall have prosecuted? The lord.

17. Why does he prosecute? It is at his option.

18. Can a lord exact the accessories? He cannot.

19. What if a person, who is not the owner of the property, prosecute the theft or the accessory upon a person thrice to the relic? It is not legal.

XL. [OF BURNING.]

1. The worth of a building is paid for according to the props: twenty pence for each prop that shall support the roof beam, and two score pence for the roof beam itself; and the value of the property lost by any one in the building is to be shared in nine shares upon the accessories, and the one who shall thrust the brand into the building when burnt to be accounted a felon, if the burning be felonious.

2. If it be violence there is no accessory, for there is no accessory to violence: some say, however, that to violence there is an accessory, and a dirwy for violence: such violence as the burning of a building by a border country, for which the three dirwys can be imposed upon the three kinds of accessories. The punishment of such accessories, if confessed, or not legally denied, is three pounds. The owner, however, has nothing from any accessory.

3. Why does the owner of the building prosecute those accessories? It is at his option.

4. There is no accessory but to felonious burning.

5. Every building is not of the same worth.

6. If a building be burnt over the head of a fugitive it is not felony.

XLI. THUS IT IS AS TO A CROSS.

1. A disclaiming, or denial, or oath of an absolver, is to be lawfully taken and given in the presence of witnesses, and the party to come with a relic, and deliver it to such as shall be without either, and deny that he is entitled to the property, or pay for the property; and that is not lawful, without a relic in his hand.

2. Every body who shall have an interest in a thing, can place a cross in that thing, until it shall be settled.

3. Thus it is to be as to a cross: to be received from a lord, or such as act for him, in the presence of witnesses, and testified to them, and delivered in the presence of evidences, with a fixed raith for breaking it; that is, the oaths of three persons nearest in worth to the person; one on behalf of his father, one on the part of his mother, and he himself being the third.

4. Thus ought it to be as to a cross: after it shall be lawfully received, to be delivered in the presence of evidences; and then it cannot be denied, if it be proved; unless the witnesses are objected to; or a shield is provided against the cross; and that is a lawful arddelw. If it be not proved through evidences, let the party swear three times to its being given against the person; and let that person counter-swear three times against him; and then a raith is to be imposed upon the defendant. In this manner he is to swear: that he gave no cross against him; and that no cross was broken by him.

5. No person is to receive a cross, without its being given against another: for a cross does not lapse if proceeded with.

6. No person is to give a cross, for exacting property, in the blank days, or to act in consequence of it; if it be given, however, let the law be resorted to; or let it be complained of.

7. It is no cross that a married woman shall receive; and she cannot place one against any body.

8. Every thing that a married woman shall do, let her husband answer for her.

9. It is no cross, except that which shall be extended by hand.

10. There is not to be a cross in pannage, because pannage is to be there exercised; neither in corn.

11. There cannot be, as to any cross, but one punishment for its breach to a lord: to prove a negative and that no one could be a surety, except such as enforced it, either willingly, or unwillingly; and that was difficult, for some could not do that. So it was enacted afterwards, that a surety, and every body, should enforce it by a cross; and punishment for it if broken; which is nine score pence.

13. Three rods: a cross; a citation; and a prison; and these are called:

14. The three swords of dominion, or the three rods of compulsion: for, from a dread of the citation, a person will comply with the cross; if he come not when cited, it is contempt; when contempts shall have increased upon him, the person is banished; when he shall be found in the country after being banished, contrary to law, he is imprisoned as disobedient: and if that were not to be, it would be no better to be a lord than to be his man.

15. One cross which cannot be rendered ineffective, and there is but the pleasure of the lord concerning it: a cross which shall be set up, that no one shall intrude upon the king's household, except such as the king shall have knowledge of; any one found beyond that cross is at the will of the king, as to despoiling him.

16. A cross only continues from one term to another: some [of the judges] say that a cross of elm laths will only continue a year.

17. A cross in absence is no cross: therefore, it used to be customary, as to a cross in a guarded place, or within a [pasture], to put a wooden cross in the ground, standing upright, or above the door, to show that a cross was set up. The law, nevertheless, willeth the proving of a cross by evidences, if it be said to have been in absence; to wit, to its being known and seen [to have been placed] by the other.

18. There are three shields against a cross: to act by its direction; to complain against it; or, to have recourse to law.

19. The cause for that is, that against every claim there is to be a denial, or confession, or lawful arddelw: confession is, to act by the intention of the cross.

20. Why is law resorted to? To deny, as the law may adjudge, if it is to be denied.

21. Why is it complained against? That is the lawful arddelw against the cross, and the defence.

22. Some say, that against a cross [is to be] denial; that resort to law is no shield; the law, however, decides that it is sufficient.

23. No one is to receive a cross, nor to set it up, except such as is to do so [by law].

xxiv. Ny ddyly neb roi croes rac arall eithyr rhac neb a ddyly bot ynghamlwrw amdanei os bwrir mal mab llei no phedeir ar ddeg blwydd, neu ynfyt neu alltut, neu ryw ddynyon a fo meddyant y ereill arnunt.

xxxv. Ny ddyly croes rhac anifeil fot.

xxxvi. Ny ddlyir rhoddi croes difwyn neu ddiwat heb greir yn y neill law.

24. No one has a right to set up a cross against another, except against such as are subject to a camlwrw for it if thrown down; as, [not against] a youth under fourteen years of age, or an idiot, or an alltud, or any persons over whom others have authority.

25. No one, by law, is to set up a cross against another, except at the place where his usual abode shall be, or where his right, or property, may be; wheresoever that shall be, he is to abide by it: because it is a citation where that shall be; if there be a citation, he is to answer; if he is to answer, he is to be subservient to the cross.

26. If such kind of cross be set up, where he is not to answer, let it be complained against.

27. A cross is only to continue so long as the lord to whom it belongs shall continue.

28. Every body is to act subservient to a cross, that shall be without other authority over him, except a lord.

29. There is one cross, which it is not necessary to receive: a cross set up by a proprietor upon his patrimony lest it be occupied.

30. The three supporters of a cross: a lord; a canghellor; and an apparitor.

31. By a cross are enforced: briduw; suretiship; spear penny; an enquiry into a stock; the oath of an absolver; and every thing which there is no way of claiming by resorting to law; as with regard to pasture, which is to be preserved with a cross, since there is no law to guard it.

32. No one can be an arddelw to break a cross.

33. There are three futile crosses: a cross on the bark of a tree, or on its butt, or on its top, against its being worked, whether standing, or lying down; and a cross at the head of a path, against its being walked, and which it is not necessary to attend to, although the land shall be ploughed, if it be an accustomed path; or a cross which shall not be enforced by an oath; that is, unless a cross shall be lawfully proceeded with, it is no cross; and which is, by swearing three times that a person ought to set up a cross, and after such procedure, it will be necessary to deny its having been set up.

34. There is to be no cross in grass, since it may be cut down.

35. There is to be no cross against an animal.

36. A cross of rejection, or one of denial, is not to be set up, without a relic in the one hand.

XXXVII. Tri amser ny ddylir rhoddi croes mewn tir: o nawfet dydd Chwefror hyt nawfet dydd Mei; o nawfet dydd Awst hyt nawfet dydd Rhagfyr; ac yn y dyddyeu dydyon am dim.

37. Three seasons when a cross is not to be set on land: from the ninth day of February until the ninth day of May; from the ninth day of August until the ninth day of December; and during the blank days, on no account.

38. The three compelling instruments of a claimant: a cross; a plaint; and a lawful process.

39. Three crosses which do not comprise punishment for them, being the three vain crosses: a cross at the head of a path, against walking it, for it will be walked over as before, notwithstanding; and a cross upon a decayed tree lying in a wood; and a cross not prosecuted with an oath; for unless it be lawfully prosecuted, there is no punishment for breaking it.

40. The three proprietors of a cross: a king; a bishop; and an abbot.

XLIII. OF THE OATH OF AN ABSOLVER.

1. Thus it is as to the oath of an absolver: a person takes a cross, and comes and sets it up, in the presence of witnesses, lest it be denied that any cross was set up: if it be denied, let it be proved by evidences against another, who shall not either deny that he took the property by violence, or by stealth, or as he may be minded, in answer to the other.

2. Some say [that the defendant] is to answer, or to do right to him for the property; that is, to disown, or to deny; or, if there be a refusal, then to prove the refusal, and complain. Then it is necessary for the person to do one of the two; if he act subservient to the cross, let him take the property; if he do not, let the complainant complain against him sharply: if he deny, let him deny thus: that he took not the property in any way which is charged upon him.

3. The oath of an absolver is the oath of one person, without the oath of any body, to charge or to deny; but one oath only.

4. Is a lawful charge proper for compelling the oath of an absolver? It is not proper. If there were a lawful charge, then there would be two oaths, and there would not be a solitary oath.

5. If a person deny the oath of an absolver being made against him, let the other prove by evidences of its being made; and let him then attain the evidences, if he can.

6. The oath of an absolver is not to be delayed, as to theft, except in three places: upon a bridge of one tree; at the door of a church yard; and at the door of a church.

LAWS, II.

In respect to other property, it can be delayed ; and it is no breach by his failing in it, until he shall be judged, and recourse had to law.

7. It does not pertain to these persons to take the oath of an absolver : a lord ; a bishop ; a pregnant woman ; a mute ; one who is deaf ; and a stranger to the language.

XLIII. THUS IT IS AS TO SUMMONS.

1. There is no legal summons but that of an apparitor.

2. A summons to a person on the morning the suit takes place is legal, if he can come, but he is to have due time allowed for aid.

3. There is no citation, by law, except upon the body of a person himself, and by his name : by custom, however, there is ; because custom there puts law aside ; to wit, by citing the party in his parish church, or upon his land, or by his property at his home.

4. Whoever shall be cited lawfully, unless he come to the session the first day, he is in contempt, unless there be a lawful excuse for him on that day ; if he do not come on the second, without a lawful excuse for him, he is in contempt ; if he do not come on the third, he is in contempt, unless there be a lawful excuse for him. Then the judge is to pronounce ■ sentence of food-forbiddance upon him ; and whoever should see him to bring him to abide the law, with punishment to such as shall feed him, and lodge him ; and the whole of what shall be found of his property to go to the lord. When he conforms to the will of the lord, and of the country, if he be able to prove a lawful excuse, he is to have his property ; and all the acts of contempt become of no effect.

5. If a person be cited to the pleas, and there be an excuse for him, as that he could not come from his being ill, or anything similar, he is not held in contempt. If he come not to the third, and there be an excuse for him, he is not to be held in contempt, some say ; then the lord is to send his officers, with the person to whom the claim belongs, as to which the contempt took place, to see the person if he be ill ; and then the person is to empower another to answer for him, and to abide loss or gain ; and then that person is to come to the pleas, if lawfully summoned. Unless the lord send somebody to see the sick person, there is to be forbearance on account of his inability. And what if he cannot come, and send an excuser to swear that he cannot come, unless it is to be a day of loss and gain? In the day of loss and gain, no excuse in the world is to be received. What is a day of loss and gain? Where a claimant and a defendant are present, mutually to speak, and the law appoints a time for them to bring forward their essentials to the field; and, on the appointed day, the one bring not forward what he promised, his claim fails; for his arddelw failed, that is, his evidences; because he has not performed what he promised by law. [By] custom, an excuser is permitted, lest a process [be weakened].

i. Deu ledrat y sydd: lledrat cynhyrchawl . i . gwydd; alledrat angynrychawl . i . absen. Os lledrat cynrychawl fydd, damdwng a ddylyir amdanaw.

6. No one is to be summoned, without a claiming party, or a lord, or at the necessity of the lord.

7. No one can summon out of the bounds of the cymwd wherein his office shall be.

8. Thus an excuser is to swear: that the person is so sick by a disease from God, or bruise, or wound, that he could not come there on that day to seek right over wrong by his own strength; or swear that he is on the service of his lord present, military service, or pleas by previous summons, or in prison so that he could not come, or heard not the summons, or in other ways of a similar kind.

9. If he be excused from death, if his death be publick, the suit is to be no further proceeded in, if the excuse take place in the first court; if in the second, or the third, although a camlwrw be imposed upon him it is not to be paid.

10. It is not a legal summons if the excuse be true, except what is done shall be complained of; unless complaint be made to the lord himself, he can order a summons.

XLIV. THUS IT IS AS TO THEFT.

1. There are two thefts: theft in presence, that is, in sight; and theft not in presence, that is, in absence. If it be theft in presence, swearing to it is proper.

2. Whoever shall have his property stolen, let him seek his property in the place it may be, and, if he get his property without opposition, let him take the property, unless he be prevented, and let him go his way to the judge, and let him swear, unless he be prevented, that he got his property in one of the three places which are of the same nature as theft in hand; to wit, under the same roof, the same enclosure, and the same lock as [the person upon whom] the theft [is charged,] or driving before him and [following after,] or assisting in driving, or casting it from his shoulder to the ground, or bearing it on his shoulder, or his arm; then the person is to inform the [judge of the nature] of the property.

3. If a person meet the person with the property, let him ask: 'Who guards this property?' It is then right for the guardian to say that he does.

4. 'God knows,' says the claimant, 'it is wrong for thee to guard my property.'

5. Then let the defendant say: 'I have a full denial as to having any of thy property.'

6. Then let the officers and him seize the property, and together accompany it to the court; and he is not to be separated from the property until a legal decision: for no one is to be separated from his property except by [sentence of law].

7. If he be cast, he is not to find surety, nor is any of his spoil to be consumed in the court until the claim be disposed of.

8. If it be consumed, if they cast him, the thief is not to lose his life.

9. When the pleas shall be [ended as to] him and the goods, [he is free,] whatever amount might be in his hand, after that; and let the one who shall kill his cattle answer to the lord as a thief or his worth, if he be adjudged to be a thief for freeing a thief.

10. The person, however, who shall kill the cattle is not to lose his life; as it is not right to execute any one for theft without property being found in his hand.

11. In the first court, when the thief shall be brought into the field with the property in his hand, let the judge arrange the parties legally, if the claim and property be of such amount as to require it; that is, for land and soil, or an ox, or a cow, or a horse, or the worth of three score pence or more. A pleader, however, is not needed but for the worth of three score pence.

12. Let the claimant then state his claim, and swear to the property as the judge shall require: that is, if it be dead property, with his left hand upon the property, and his right hand upon the relic; if it be an animal with ears, with his left hand upon the right ear of the animal, and his right hand upon the relic. If it be a bird, a hawk, or falcon, or sparrow-hawk, if sued as taken by violence, or surreption, with his hand upon his head: let him swear to God first that it belonged to him, and that he reclaimed him, and swearing by his jesses; and that there was neither a lord, nor an owner, who could sell it, or give it, when it was separated from him, but himself, his wife, and his lord.

13. And so all property is sworn to, to wit, by placing his lord as participating in the oath, and his wife, if he have one. The lord is named, because no one is without a lord, and he is entitled to the property of his man, or a share, in many ways. The wife is inserted in the oath, because a wife may give and sell the property in many ways, according to the kind of privilege she may have, and the nature of the property, yet the husband is paramount in the ownership of the property, although she may give it without the consent of the husband, and the husband is to sue for the property.

14. Let the claimant likewise say in his oath, that he was not separated from his property in any way of gift, or lending, or deposit; but that it was taken by theft, or violence, or surreption: and let him name the day in the week, and the week in the month, and the month in the season, and the season in the year, and the trev, and the cymwd; and the cantrev it is no impediment to name; and there is no need for the claimant to name the thief who has the property: yet it is necessary for the one, in whose hand the property is, to name one of the [three] legal answers: denial; confession; or legal arddelw.

15. There is another kind of theft in absence, and there is a dirwy for it, as for a piece of a hundred perplexities.

16. There are three kinds of pieces of a hundred perplexities by law: the first is, theft the way it goes, that is, if an animal be stolen, and its skin be taken off, and the skin be found with a person, and the flesh be consumed, whether by being given, or kept, or sold, or in any way; the person with whom the skin is found is to lose his life, unless he gets an arddelw or guardians.

17. If the owner of the animal complain against each person into whose hands the flesh of his animal went, and sue him legally; if he confess, three pounds go to the lord.

18. Is the complainant to have the amount of his claim? Neither from accessory, nor from any one who shall take it; lest illegality be done.

19. If the flesh be denied to have come to one of them, the raith is one hundred men of such as can be had, that is, it is no impediment if they be not so near in affinity as to pay or receive galanas.

20. If he give part of this stolen flesh as a present, or sell it to another, and he to another, and so to the hundredth hand, whatever way it goes, it is a piece of a hundred perplexities, and a dirwy [for it] if it be overtaken, and there be a complainant concerning it.

21. The second piece, a carcase torn by a wolf, that is, if a person find flesh begun to be torn by a wolf, or dogs, if it be a tame animal, or hidden, and take it without the consent of the owner; if the owner complain concerning it, whatever way it goes to the hundredth hand, if it be confessed, three pounds for the contempt; if denied, the oaths of one hundred men deny it.

22. The third piece, the king's hart; whatever way it goes, if the king complain, a camlwrw [for it]; if it be denied, the oaths of one hundred men deny it.

23. Some of the judges say, that there is no surreption in law: for, if a person's property be taken in his absence, it is theft; if taken in his presence, it is violence. That is good pleading, nevertheless there is surreption in law. Surreption is, a thing that shall be taken in absence, and shall not be denied to have been taken, although the surreption shall be denied; and it is not fair, for such kind of property, to make a plaint of theft concerning it.

24. If a judge adjudge property to a person, he may seize upon the property, and take an apparitor with him to take it, if there be no surety for it, and to enforce the caption if impeded.

XLV. [OF A SESSION.]

1. It is a legal session where there may be a judge, as to suretiship and impounding, if he be sought; and the judgment he shall there give is as [efficient] as in the pleas publicly; and the person cast before him loses his cause: he ought always to have a relic with him, lest there be a deficiency.

2. He is to seek to settle between the two parties, and if he cannot, judge between them: he can dispose of suretiship, impounding, co-tillage, and the teithi of every beast; if there be a plaint of one against the other, let it come to the session.

3. A pleader who shall mutually pledge with a judge, if cast, is never after to mutually pledge with a judge.

4. Every defendant is to have time if he ask it, the claimant being previously bound, before he is himself bound, and to call for a statement of the extent of the claim, and the illegality, and what law he may abide by; and then the claimant shall not swerve from that: and then let the defendant go to consult, and let the claimant remain bound, and after that let the defendant come, and let him bind himself, and then let pleadings take place.

5. Three cases in which a judge becomes an advocate: one is, as to a judgment he previously delivered, in what manner he adjudged it, if he acknowledge to have decided; if he deny, however, he is not an advocate, and he swears not concerning it, although he may be doubted.

vi. Eil yw pan ymwystlo a dyn yn gyfreithiol am y frawt ef a fydd yna yn gyngaws; ac yna y dyly yr ynat llys beri ysgrifennu y frawt ef, a hynn a ddywetto y llall yn y erbyn, ac ef a ddyly y llall henwi yr ynat a baro ef ar hyn y bo yr ymrysson amdanaw ac ynteu ny ddyly ymwystlaw ac ef eithyr ar beri o honaw ef ynat a farno brawt a fo gwell noc a farnws ef, ac ynat gwell; a henwi y frawt a baro ynteu yw barnu fal y barner ae henwi ynteu. xiii. Ynat a ddyly dysgu yn graff, sef yw hynny un gair neu un sillaf a symut

6. The second is, when he shall mutually pledge legally with a person as to his judgment, he is there a pleader; and then the judge of the court is to cause his judgment to be written, and what the other shall say against him, and that other is to name the judge that he shall choose, and the matter about which the contention shall be; and he is not to mutually pledge with him but for the producing a judge who shall adjudge a better sentence than he adjudged, and a better judge; and name the sentence which he shall cause him to adjudge, as it shall be adjudged, and name him. And the judge of the court shall decide between them, if there be one, and if not, let the lord appoint one in his stead: and no one can mutually pledge with the judge of the court in that case, but can in any other.

7. If a judge be adjudged to have given a wrong sentence, let him buy his tongue from the lord for as much as the worth of all his other [members,] and be never after a judge, for the sentence he shall give is no sentence in law: the worth of his tongue is two score and two pounds.

8. The third case in which a judge becomes a pleader is, when he sues for his own property; and he cannot there place any one in his stead as a judge, for there is to be no judge in the cymwd but him: a lord, however, can appoint another to decide in his stead, lest he lose his property: and, therefore, a judge of a cymwd cannot be a pleader but with the lord's consent.

9. The third doubting of judgment is; when a defendant shall mutually pledge with a judge as to his judgment; and as to those two mutual pledgings there is a decision in written authority through the arguments of the learned, for law books are of publick unquestioned authority, and it pertains to credit the best book, and the book of the best judge.

10. If a judge pass a sentence, and the other judges disagree with him, any one of them who differs with him may mutually pledge with him, [so that] he be not the owner of the suit, nor pleader, nor guider.

11. If a judge mutually pledge with another judge, let whichever of them be cast pay the worth of his tongue; as he adjudged a wrong sentence.

12. Judgeship is not hereditary, that is, the son of a judge cannot be a judge more than another, unless he know what shall pertain to it, and unless a lord bestow the office on him.

13. A judge is to learn acutely, that is, one word or one syllable alters a meaning in law; ask humbly, and wherefore, to ask humbly will enable him to free the intricate; to hear fully, that is, to hear the pleadings on both sides; to keep in memory, that is, to keep the two pleadings to see if there be difference between them rendering it needful for sending to interrogate; to sum up patiently, that is, this was said by thee, this was said by thee; judge mercifully, that is, to delay as long as he can, and seek to reconcile them, and if he cannot to judge justly.

14. A judge is not to give a judgment gratuitously: except for land and soil when it shall be sued for; the second is, when there shall be a suit from one cantref to another; the third case, as far as a penny, if it be less he has nothing, for he has then but the tenth penny; the fourth case, in ebediw; the fifth case, in contempt; the sixth,

15. If one of two parties before a judge be disobedient to give surety to the judge for his fee, let the judge pass his sentence for the one that is obedient: for he is not entitled to law who fulfils it not.

16. If there be an interrogation, and the claimant, or defendant be asked, on whose speech do they depend, whether that of the pleader, or that of the guider, and which he willet to be enjoyed if they differ; and the pleader seek to have his speech made use of, and the guider seek to have his speech made use of; the judge leaves it at the choice of the claimant if they be for him, or at the choice of the defendant if his pleader and guider differ.

17. If a pleader or a guider testify thus: 'I will testify to the judge that he has not done this,' or, 'thou hast not said the whole concerning it;' that testimony is nugatory: for testimony can be as to a word and a deed, but not as to a thought; and that is only a man's thought.

18. If a pleader or guider die before the day of loss and gain, the judge can appoint another in his stead.

19. The defendant can, after binding himself to law, go to counsel, with the consent of the judge, after the claim shall have been stated to him, and knowing what law shall be abided by. If he remain in his place too long without answering let him beware lest he be testified against and his silence be said to be confession; and, therefore, let him be ready, unless he think to take counsel, and let him not go further than the judge shall go to consult.

21. Let not the lord go from his place while the judge is consulting, lest it be a vague session.

22. There is no need of employing a pleader and guider but for land, and soil, and privilege.

23. A pleader may be employed for every thing that shall be claimed in law, or for an animal that shall be three score pence in value, or for the worth of three score pence, or for three score pence, or for galanases.

24. A leper cannot be a pleader.

25. A religious person that shall be bound by vow and shall have left the world cannot be, nor a clerical graduate, as a priest; if the party do not object to him, the judge may. If it be minded to object to them, let it be done when they shall be arranging the parties, and the judge shall ask: 'Who is thy pleader?'

26. If a pleader give agreement, or faith, or surety, that he would never oppose the suit, or the person who might support it, he can be objected to by proving the agreement.

27. A deaf person cannot be a pleader.

28. A lord can bind himself in [law] for his alltud, and a father for his son under fourteen years, or a daughter under twelve years, for they cannot by law, unless the lord take mercy on them.

29. It is no impediment to a pleader to sit near to the judge.

30. A pleader is not to leave his place, and if he do, he loses the extent of his claim; there is no other punishment for him but through consent: he may rise on his knee if there be need.

31. Let a pleader so testify that the judge and the gwrdas shall hear, and let him call three times for judgment, and if he get it not, let him call upon the lord to order it.

32. Neither pleader, nor guider, nor claimant, nor defendant, is to sit, or rise, or speak, until the judge shall permit him; and they must be silent when he shall require under pain of punishment.

33. If a judge thrice require a claimant and defendant to mutually speak, and the defendant shall not answer, or the other claim, they have lost the extent of their claim: for extreme silence is confession: and the claimant is to be ready, and is not to have time for aid after binding himself in law if he require it; neither is the defendant.

LAWS, II.

she being a hostage for one of her kindred, and in that way claim by maternity, and promise evidences of her violation, if he be doubted; the law says, that evidences are not admissible as to violation, for there is an appointed raith for it.

2. If he say thus: 'My mother was violated in alltudship, and there the alltud begat me, and in that way I am to have patrimony along with you, and will prove the deed thus; I put it to the lord, the judge, and the session, that there is a claim against him to punish him for that, and, therefore, I am to have patrimony along with you.'

3. 'God knows,' says the defendant, 'I put it to the judge, that there is proof as to violation, and as thou canst not prove it, thou art not to have patrimony.'

4. The law says, that the lord can be a witness as to the determination of that suit before him, and that is not testimony as to the violation, but as to the law that took place in the court as to the violation, and the punishment of it.

5. If the defendant say thus, when the land shall be claimed in that way: 'God knows,' says he, 'thy mother was not a sister of ours, and we deny her in law.' There is no need of finders to swear that the person originates from maternity, for he proves it himself.

6. 'God knows,' says the claimant, 'thou sayest wrong, seeking to deny a thing in law which the law expressly forbids to deny; for no one can deny another who is entitled to patrimony, or maternity along with him, and I am entitled with thee; and, therefore, I appeal to the law that I speak truth.'

7. And the law says, that it is true that during the mother's life it cannot be done, and hardly after her death can he be deemed an alltud, or denied; for no one can be degraded in absence by [law;] for proof does not accord as to the dead: and if his mother were alive, after he might have bound himself in law with his uncles, it would be necessary for them to answer the claim he might advance, by denial, or confession, or lawful arddelw that they should not answer.

8. If a person claim land by maternity, and say, that he killed a person to avenge a man of his mother's kindred, and that his land went as blood land: 'And to the law I appeal, as I avenged my mother's relative, I am, therefore, to come to you for patrimony; and, if you doubt that, there are for me enow who know that what I say is true, for I put it to the lord that I had formerly a claim.'

9. 'God knows,' says the defendant, 'strangely thou speakest; thou art promising evidences to a thing which are inadmissible in law, to wit, as to galanas, except to preserve a man against such a reproach; and where evidences are not to be by law, I appeal that thou art not to promise evidences, where they are not pertinent.'

10. 'No, God knows,' says he, 'I am not producing evidences as to galanas, but as to the suit and disposal of his galanas, and that I can do by law; and that is true and right.'

11. Thus it is as to maternity: to be legally claimed, and request a lord to have mercy on him; and the lord is to cite his uncles, his mother's brothers, or his mother's cousins, or his own cousins, or second cousins, and cause them to appoint one to answer, and lose or gain, and he is to do law.

XLVII. [OF DADENHUDD.]

1. Let the claimant say, that he himself, or his father before him, possessed that land by investiture from a lord in lawful session; and that he ploughed and sowed and harrowed, and had a house and property for a year and years, and that he was illegally ejected from it; and if there be who shall doubt that, that there are for him enow to prove that he was so long upon the land; and if there be who shall doubt that he was illegally ejected, that there are for him enow who know it; and appealing to the law that he is again to disuncover the hearth, that he had uncovered himself, or his father before him.

2. Let the defendant then answer, either by denial of his being ejected from the land he disuncovered, or saying thus: 'This land which I keep by dadenhudd came to me; and if there be who shall deny that, there are for me enow who know what I say to be true.'

3. 'God knows,' says the claimant, 'I promised evidences as to my being ejected from the land I disuncovered, with guardians who shall defend my being there so long, and to the commencement of my legal possession of the land.'

4. If the claimant's evidences succeed, dadenhudd shall be adjudged to him and to keep his place until the end of the year without answering any one; yet he is not a proprietor, but he is to have a house plot, and property, and ploughing as a conservator.

5. If he bring guardians to the commencement of the claim of propriety, he cannot be ever disturbed.

6. If he bring them not that day, he can do so at the legal periods to bring them, and then the claimant will have no need of land borderers to claim the land by dadenhudd; he must have, however, supernumerary-trev men, to prove his being illegally ejected from the land.

7. The conservator, however, must have land borderers and supernumerary-trev men, that is, borderers from the land around him to keep for him his land.

8. If the claimant advance against the defendant, or his guardian, that he did not originate from the supernumerary-trev, let him say that he did, and that he has enow who know he did; and enow who know and will keep the privilege of a supernumerary-trev; and those guardians need be only respectable privileged men.

9. If a defendant say: 'By dadenhudd this land came to me; and to the law I appeal, that I am not to leave the land, while it shall be appropriate to keep dadenhudd.'

10. 'God knows,' says the claimant, 'thou art keeping this land longer than the privilege of dadenhudd, and there are enow who know that; and to the law I appeal, that I am to have dadenhudd over thee.'

11. The law says, whoever shall keep land by dadenhudd longer than the privilege of dadenhudd, dadenhudd is to be had.

12. If the defendant can, by law, prove that he is a proprietor, let the non-proprietor depart from thence. And if the two titles be equal, the land shall be shared, and let them both settle on the land.

13. Whoever comes, through dadenhudd, to a trev, pays six score pence.

14. If he come to a maenol, he pays one pound.

15. If to a randir, he pays three score pence.

16. If brothers claim dadenhudd, the eldest is to have the dadenhudd; and he gives dadenhudd to his brothers.

XLVIII. [OF MEERING.]

1. Conservancy implies a building, or kiln, or barn; boundaries cannot be carried beyond those.

2. No one, likewise, but a proprietor, or a privileged man, can meer.

3. A randir, likewise, is not to be taken when shewn as a meer; for every one is to have his randir.

4. A question of meer, however, from which a country shall shrink, saying, that they know not, and that by the relic; if the trev, or the person who shall claim it, be equal in privilege to the one who shall possess it, and they be equal, then the law shares between them; and there the lord is to have six score pence, and the judge twenty-four pence; and so for every meering between two trevs of equal privilege.

5. If neither of the two parties be entitled to that land, it is the king's waste.

6. If there be finders, who are to settle a suit of meering, it is right to abide their decision before adjudging by law: those men are to be breyrs without office over any one, and not themselves subject to the authority of others.

7. If there be not finders, the law adjudges preoccupation to meer; and a randir goes not as a meer; and if a randir be sought to be taken, the person who shall claim it loses his cause.

† The boundary between Powys and Gwynedd followed nearly the course of the river Dyvi, the Berwyn range of mountains, and the river Alun to its junction with the Dee. The limits of Powys on the side of Dyved and South Wales were, in general, the river Wye.

•PRIVILEGES OF THE MEN OF •POWYS.

1. A minstrel, a poetical animator, praises you,
A song without omission, without deceit;
Hear a lay of high theme, inspiring,
Not the hateful song of the train of *Tysilio.

2. By the great endowment of the Son of God I am to avouch,
The form of example I uphold,
Lays of wolfs, foremost, manliest,
By the canon of minstrels I sing.

3. Offspring of *Selyv, serpents of the conflicts of *Meigen,
Not of battle loss they hear;
Conflicters with superior immunities,
Kings increased their privileges.

4. Powys increased in fair praise from far,
They caused not failure;
They keep the full custom of the leader,
Brave heroes, they pay not two 'prids.

* The religious establishment at Meivod in Montgomeryshire, dedicated to Tysilio.

II. Tercia pars prede domini est cum idomitis et capris, quia nullo cogente ueniunt, cum argento, et auro, et uestibus lýmbosis, [que,] si plus sit quam libra, regis sunt.

[LIBER SECUNDUS.]

I. DE TEÝR COLOUÝN KEFREÝTH [TRIBUS COLUMNIS LEGIS].

I. Nemo debet iudicare nisi sciat illa tria que dicuntur teýr colouýn kefreýth [tres colonne legis], et precium hominum, et animalium que usui hominum sunt necessaria.

II. Sunt autem hec tria: nau affeýth galanas [novem affinia homicidii]; nau affeýth than [novem affinia incendii]; nau affeýth lledrat [novem affinia furti].

II. HEC SUNT NAU APPEÝT GALANAS [NOVEM AFFINIA HOMICIDII].

I. Primum eorum est, indicare cuidam genti ubi sit homo ille quem occidere uelit, id est, esse tauautrud [linguam rubentem].

II. Secundum est, dare consilium de illo occidendo.

III. Tertium est, consentire homicidio.

IV. Quartum est, esse spectator, id est, keuarwýd.

V. Quintum est, ire in consortio aliquorum ad occidendum hominem.

VI. Sextum est, cum eis uillam intrare in qua sit homo ille.

VII. Septimum est, adiuuare homicidium.

VIII. Octauum est, impedire hominem, id est, earruýdau, donec ueniat qui eum occidat.

IX. Nonum est, spectare eum dum occiditur.

X. Pro quolibet trium priorum de galanas, reddi debent nouem untie argenti, cum iuramento centum uirorum negando llaurudýyth, id est, effusionem sanguinis.

XI. Pro quolibet aliorum trium, nouem untie argenti duppliciter, cum iuramento centum uirorum negando effusionem sanguinis.

XII. Pro quolibet ultimorum trium, nouem untie argenti trippliciter, cum iuramento centum uirorum negando llaurudýyth [effusionem sanguinis].

- xiii. Siquis autem fatetur llaurudýayth [effusionem sanguinis], reddat omnino galanas.
- xiv. Galanas sic diuiditur: tertia pars constituitur super llaurud [manum rubentem], et due alie partes super genus suum.
- xv. Genus uero diuidet illud iterum in tres partes: tertia pars constituetur super gentem maternam, et due alie partes super gentem paternam.
- xvi. Cum llaurud [manu rubente] debent pater suus et mater reddere tertiã partem que cadit super eum, et etiam fratres et sorores reddere cum eo debent; quia, si ipse llaurud [manus rubens] occiditur non agente ab eo interfecti, et galanas eius redditur, pater recipiet tertiam partem de galanas; similiter, si ipse occiditur antequam reddat galanas a se interfecti, pater pro eo reddet.
- xvii. Redditio pro homine interfecto reddi debet siue diuidi usque ad nonum gradum.
- xviii. Frater recipiet siue reddet quantum duo consanguinei, scilicet, patruales.
- xix. Due sorores tantum recipient siue reddent quantum unus frater.
- xx. Pretium sanguinis est xxⁱⁱⁱⁱ^o. denarii: sanguinis Christi pretium fuit xxx^o. denarii; sed indignum uidetur si Dei et hominis sanguis esset ejusdem precii: ideo hominis sanguis minoris precii est, id est, xxⁱⁱⁱⁱ^o. denarii.
- xxi. Pretium sanguinis captiui est xvi. denarii.
- xxii. Tryargay gwayth, gwayth hýt chwll, gwayth hýt weregýs, gwayth hýt laur [triplices sunt termini fluxionis sanguinis: sanguis ad pectus; sanguis ad cingulum; sanguis ad terram]: et dicitur sanguis ille Walensice dogýn gwayth [sanguis plenus] quando a capite usque ad terram manauerit.
- xxiii. Pretio sanguinis qui dicitur gwayth hýt chwll [sanguis ad pectus] adiciuntur octo denarii.
- xxiv. Pretium secundi sanguinis, xii. denarii.
- xxv. Pretium tercii sanguinis, xxⁱⁱⁱⁱ^o. denarii.
- xxvi. Tres sanguines sunt pro quibus nil reddi debet: scilicet, sanguis dentium; et sanguis narium; et sanguis capitis tiniosi: soluti enim sunt sanguines illi.
- xxvii. Oýrcump galanas [subductio tristis homicidii] est, cum alicui imponitur se hominem occidisse, et ille aut ex indignatione aut ex superbia non inficiatur: si ille interficitur agente occisi, parentes eius nichil pro eo recipient, sed cadauer eius contra cadauer prioris dimittitur.
- xxviii. Galanas propositi regis, id est, mayr castell, ix^o. uacce et nouies xx^o. uacce cum tribus eleuationibus.
- xxix. Siquis reddat terram iggalanas [pro homicidio], omni tempore uite sue debet deliberare terram illam de omni reddito.
- xxx. Et sunt eiusdem precii omnes prefectores Demetic.
- xxxi. Mabh eyllt maynorauc awo bengebýr are týr [advena manoriam habens et ecclesiam in terra ejus] eiusdem precii est et mayr [prepositus].
- xxxii. Siquis uadit ad aliquem occidendum et occidatur, et aliquis stat et non occidat, tres uaccas gordwý [opis] causa standi det; duppliciterque neget cum iuramento centum uirorum.
- xxxiii. Qui hominem in uno exercitu deneget, iuramentum quinquaginta uirorum et dimidium libre det, id est, dýwat coýth a mayss [negare sylvam et agrum].
- xxxiv. Si quis predatus aliquem fuerit et negauerit, det iuramentum quinquaginta hominum.
- xxxv. Si quis fecerit quod Walensice dicitur dýnýorn [timorem iniicere], seu kýnlluýn [insidias], xii. uaccas domino duppliciter reddat; eodem modo et pretium duppliciter juxta nobilitatem hominis reddi debet; et duppliciter peniteat qui hoc fecerit.
- xxxvi. Ad negandum kýrch godeýuauc [aggressionem publicam], et kýnlluýn [insidias], seu dýnýorn [timorem iniectum], iuramentum quinquaginta hominum det, sine exule et captiuo; et tres de illis erunt continentes et abstinentes a carne et equitatione.

III. HEC SUNT NAU APPEÝTH THAN [NOVEM APPINIA INCENDII].

- i. Primum est, dare consilium ut incendatur domus aliqua.
- ii. Secundum est, consentire incendiariis.
- iii. Tertium est, ire causa incendendi.
- iv. Quartum est, portare rwýll [fomitum].
- v. Quintum est, llad than [ignem elicere].
- vi. Sextum est, querere fomentum, id est, delwy.
- vii. Septimum est, ignem sufflare donec accendatur.
- viii. Octauum est, ponere ignem ubi comburat.
- ix. Nonum est, uidere combustionem.

x. Siquis aliquod istorum negauerit, det iuramentum quinquaginta uirorum pro eorum quolibet; et sic ei credi potest.

xi. Siquis commodauerit domum cum igne, et accenderit ter eundem ignem in ea domo, ille restituet cui prestita est.

xii. Si domus in uilla de suo igne combusta, duas proximas ab eo combustas reddet.

xiii. Si quis dederit ignem, uel incidat ferro, dimidia pars in igne et dimidia operanti in eo erit.

xiv. Tres ignes pro quorum combustione nil redditur: scilicet, ignis Martio mense accensus, id est, than godeyð; et ignis balnei publici cuiusdam uille; et ignis domus conflatorii, id est, geueil, si sit edificata in spatio nouem cubitorum a domibus uille, et cooperta miricis, uel glebis, uel tabulis.

xv. Qui accenderit ignem in trituratorio et ibi dimiserit, et alius uenerit et superposuerit ligna ita ut comburatur, ambo reddant per medium: si uero fidem prior a secundo acceperit quod ignem extinguat, et hoc notum fuerit, nil reddat qui accenderit.

IV. HEC SUNT NAU APPEYTH LEDRAT [NOVEM AFFINIA FURTI].

i. Primum eorum est, uidere dolum et socium adquirere.

ii. Secundum est, consentire latrocinio.

iii. Tercium est, uiaticum dare.

iv. Quartum est, ire in comitatu latronum et uiaticum portare.

v. Quintum est, cum eis uillam intrare, et frangere domum uel bostar.

vi. Sextum est, capere illud quod furtim rapitur.

vii. Septimum est, ambulare cum eo die uel nocte.

viii. Octauum est, partem ex eo habere.

ix. Nonum est, celare furtum, et precium a latrone accipere.

x. Si quis aliquod istorum negauerit, iuramentum quinquaginta uirorum pro quolibet faciat; et sic ei credi potest.

xi. Si quis lýw [manifestum] uelit assignare, hoc modo debet procedere: actore et reo presentibus, accipiat penreyt [iuratorem precipuum], et iuret in eo quod sole luscente uiderit eum cum re illa, et quod non dixerit odio uel amore uel precio ductus, sed ut rei ueritatem manifestet; ita fit lýw [manifestum], nisi fuerit gurthtung [iuramentum contrarium], seu lýss [reprobatio].

xii. Gurthtung [iuramentum contrarium] fit per iuramentum duorum.

xiii. Lýss [reprobatio] fit propter galanas, uel propter contentionem de terra, uel quia rem cum uxore sua habuit.

xiv. Siquis equum, uel bouem, uel quodlibet furtum inuenerit, ille cum quo inueniatur adducat illuc suum aduocatum, id est, gwarant; et si non potest ducere, accipient eum ut latronem.

xv. De furto numquam sit contentio nisi prius sit super aliquem manac [delatio], cum iuramento in tribus locis: scilicet in hostio cimiterii; et in hostio ecclesie; et in hostio chori; coram presbitero illius ecclesie: et hoc presbiter ille in placito testificatus sit, cuius uerbo credendum est tunc.

V. QUOT ET QUI QUORUM CUILIBET CREDENDUM EST.

Nouem homines sunt quorum cuilibet credendum est et soli in testimonio ferendo.

i. Primus est, dominus inter duos homines suos.

ii. Secundus est, patronus sacerdos inter duos parochianos.

iii. Tercius est, pater inter duos filios suos.

iv. Quartus est, iudex de suo iudicio, si dubitetur quomodo ipse iudicauerit.

v. Quintus est, fideiussor de fideiussione sua.

vi. Sextus, sacerdos de testimonio ei testato, hoc modo: managur [index], et ille qui rem commisit, et sacerdos ecclesie; et ibi dicat sacerdos, 'Pro Deo ne me inducas in falsum testimonium;' ibi iuret tantum; et postea fiet iterum in hostio chori; et iterum super altare: et si ille supra, quam confirmatur, et dixerit, 'Non, sed tu,' et sacerdos ei ter opponat, reddat rem que ei opponitur; ita tamen quod sacerdos cum iuramento confirmet.

vii. Septimus, puella de uirginitate sua.

viii. Octauus, pastor communis cuiusdam uille, de animali ab alio interfecto inter sua animalia.

ix. Nonus est, latro ductus ad patibulum, et certus de morte sua; huius dicto de socio suo credendum [est].

VI. DE DEPOSITARIO.

I. Si depositarius depositum amiserit, re sua propria salua, ipse totum reddet : quod si forte fur suffoderit domum, et ex ea aliquid abstulerit, custode clauem domus habente, de rebus furtim ablatiis nil custos restituet : iurabit tamen ipse et familia sua tota se sine culpa esse.

VII. DE DEBITORE.

I. Qui debitor est, et non negat, reddat ei cui debet prout uoluerit, nisi dies solutionis prius fuerat prefixus.

II. Qui namum pro debito sine licentia ceperit, totum debitum amittet, et tres uaccas camlurý domino reddet fideiussor existens soluendo. Fideiussor uero minime non soluat antequam debitor deficiet : debitor uero non deficiet dum legi paruuerit [paruerit] : lex autem eius est et ius, si ita habuit tria indumenta, id est, trý tudedýn, ut duo soluat, et tercium retineat.

III. Namum debitoris principalis, id est, kýnnogýn, non accipitur, nisi fideiussor illud tradidit.

IV. Non debet fideiussor accipi qui exul est ; neque qui forcior est ; neque monachus nisi abbate consentiente ; neque filius nisi consentiente patre ; neque scolaris nisi consentiente magistro ; neque femina, nisi domina fuerit principalis debitoris.

V. A die autem solutioni prefixo, nisi eo die principalis debitor soluerit, fideiussori conceduntur XII. dies ad soluendum ; deinde XXⁱⁱ., postea XXXⁱⁱ., ad ultimum XLⁱⁱ. dies ; et postea sine ulla contradictione soluet.

VI. Fideiussor debet ducere adauayl kýnnogýn [pignus debitoris] usque ad tutum, et primam uerberationem accipere et ligari ; et si sic non faciat, reddat ipse solus.

VII. Tribus modis differtur fideiussor et kýnnogýn [debitor] in diem terminatum : audito cornu regis euntis in exercitum ; et hawl treýss [actione rapine] ; uel lledrat [furti].

VIII. Quisquis dederit rem alicui, id est, argentum, pro uacca, uel pro lana, uel pro blado, uel pro alia re, et ipse cui res datur sit pro se fideiussor ; et amicus ille mortuus fuerit, res tamen dimiserit cum amicis suis ; debitor ille uoluerit ualentiam rei habere de rebus fideiussoris, et amicus ille qui res mortui habet dixerit quod ipse fideiussor non fuit, accipiat creditor sex uiros probatos de cognatis suis, et iuret super sepulchrum mortui, si poterit inueniri ; si non, iuret super altare dedicatum metropolis ecclesie ; et sic rem suam habeat de rebus fideiussoris.

IX. Teýr meuyllwryayth ýssýt ýnmechniaýth : e chýntaf dýwat ■ uechný ac ef yn vach ; ar eýl adef e uechni ac naallo kymmell ; e tredet dwyn dýebryt or mach gwedy taler ýdaw. [Tria sunt opprobria fideiussionis : primum est, sponsionem negare cum ipse sponsor sit ; secundum est, sponsionem agnoscere et compellere non posse ; tertium est, moratorium se prebere postquam pecuniam recepit.]

X. Fideiussor negans fideiussionem cum VIIⁱⁱ. manu propinquorum sibi in redemptione negabit : si partim negat et partim profitetur, solus iurabit.

XI. Si principalis debitor mortuus fuerit, plegius reddet : unde dictum est in pro- uerbio Walensico, gwell ýw ýth býw de vach noth kýnnogýn [melius est fideiussor tuus esse uivus quam debitor].

XII. Si principalis debitor heredem, id est, filium, habuerit, querat ius suum ab eo, si uoluerit.

XIII. Siquis negauerit mach [fideiussorem] et kýnnogýn [debitorem], det iuramentum XIIIⁱⁱ. hominum de cognatis suis ; due partes ex parte patris, tercia uero de cognatis matris.

VIII. DE INIURIA CUIUSLIBET HOMINIS.

I. Tres sunt iniurie cuiuslibet hominis : id est, si percussus fuerit ; uel cum uxore sua quis concubuerit et confessus fuerit ; uel si pacem et refugium eius quis uiolauerit et confessus fuerit ; nisi ipse potestatem habet.

II. Tria sunt genera dýruý [multarum] : scilicet, unum de pugna ; aliud de furto ; tercium de treýss [rapina] : pro unoquoque earum XII. uaccas domino reddet.

III. Si in curia uel in ecclesia fuerit, XXIIIⁱⁱ. uaccas domino reddat.

IV. Tria sunt que dicuntur trý anhepcor breenhýn, quibus rex carere non potest : scilicet, sacerdos familiaris, ad missam celebrandam et ad benedicenda cibaria ; et iudex curie, ad iudicandas causas et ad dandum consilium ; et familia, que prompta debet esse semper ad opus regis.

V. Trý anhepcor mabhucchelur [tria sunt quibus optimas carere non potest] : scilicet, cýthare [lyra] ; brecchan [teges] ; caldarium.

vi. Trý anhepcor tayauc [tria sunt quibus villanus carere non potest] : scilicet, troth-thýw [limen] ; cawýn [solium] ; talbren [lignum focarium].

vii. Tria sunt que ad regem pertinent sine participatione alii danda : scilicet, thesaurus ; accipiter ; latro.

viii. Tres sunt lýmbi regis que ad regem de iure pertinent : scilicet, llost ledan [fiber] ; beleu [martes] ; et carrlung [mustela candida] : pellis llost ledan [fibri] dimidium libre ualet ; carrlung [mustele candida], LX^s. denarios ; belew [martis], XXⁱⁱⁱⁱ^{or}. denarios ualet : et si in predatione inuenti fuerint, regis erunt.

ix. Tria sunt que si uillanus possidet non potest ea uendere sine licentia domini sui : scilicet, dextrarius ; sues ; et mel : si dominus eius ea noluerit emere, uillanus uendat cui uelit.

x. Tres artes sunt quas non licet filio uillani addici [addiscere] sine licentia domini sui : scilicet, literatura ; fabrica ars ; et poesis : si autem dominus uillani paciatur ut clericus fiat, et ordinetur, postea non poterit eum retrahere, quamuis uelit.

xi. Tria sunt que dicuntur retia regis : scilicet, familia sua ; et allwest [pascuum] equorum suorum ; et grex armentorum suorum : si enim animal de patria perditum repertum fuerit inter armenta regis, rex habebit de eo IIII^{or}. denarios legales ; similiter et de equo inter equos regis inuento, IIII^{or}. denarios legales.

xii. Teýr rwýth mabhucchelur [tria retia optimatis] : scilicet, allwest [pascuum] equorum suorum ; et grex uaccarum ; et grex suum : debet enim habere IIII^{or}. denarios legales de animali inter sua inuento.

xiii. Teýr rwýth tayauc [tria retia villani] : scilicet, grex uaccarum ; et grex porcorum ; et eius hentref [hiemalis domus] : si enim ibi aliquod animal errans inuenerit a kalan [kalendis] Maíi usque ad tempus messis, IIII^{or}. denarios de eo habebit.

xiv. Trituratorium uillani regis xxx^s. nummos ualet, si reddi oportet.

xv. Trituratorium eýllth [advene] XL^{viii}^{or}. nummis redditur.

xvi. Trituratorium uillani optimatis xxⁱⁱⁱⁱ^{or}. denarios ualet :

- XXXVII. Teýr gwarth keleýn [tres contumelie cadaveris]: scilicet, quando interrogatur quis eum occidit; cuius est feretrum; cuius est tumba.
- XXXVIII. Teýr gorset araf [tria sunt loca pro reponendis telis]: in hostio cimiterii, sub protectione Dei; in placito, sub protectione regis; et ubi hospes hospitatus fuerit, sub protectione Dei et regis.
- XXXIX. Trý guth ne dýwegýr [tres sunt impetus qui non compensabuntur]: cum inuenerit quis mulierem quam putauerit esse uirginem, et inuenerit eam corruptam; hostem non sufficientem; canem irruentem.
- XL. Teýr gauayl nýdatuerir o kefreýt [tria pignora non sunt restituenda]: unum pro furto, si confessus fuerit; aliud pro fideiussore qui non fecerit rectum de fideiussione sua, id est, ar uach ne kýmello; tertium propter galanas.
- XLI. Teýr sayrhaed keleýn [tres iniurie cadaveris]: quando occiditur; quando spoliatur; quando calce pulsatur.
- XLII. Tres aues non debent occidi in terra non sua, sine licentia ipsius cuius terra est: scilicet, aquila; grus; coruus, id est, kýc veran: quorum occisor XL^o. denarios reddet.
- XLIII. Tria sunt que, si in uia inueniuntur, pro furto ablata non reputantur: scilicet, pedol [equi calceus]; acus; nummus.
- XLIV. Tribus de causis non potest corpus malefactoris redimi: pro latrocinio, si fuerit confessus; prodicione domini sui, id est, brat; homine furtim occiso.
- XLV. Trý thauodýauc ýssýt ýaun talu gwely tauaut hwdun [tres advocati sunt quibus rectum est vulnus lingue reddere]: rex; iudex; sacerdos: uulnus enim lingue non redditur nisi tribus: regi; iudici, quando quis conatur ire contra iudicium suum; sacerdoti, quando fuerit siue in ecclesia, siue in tribus festis principalibus, siue coram rege, faciendo aut legendo cartam.
- XLVI. Trý cowýllýauc llýs [tria cooperta in curia]: dolium de med [medone]; iudicium; carmen, antequam ostendatur regi.
- XLVII. In omnibus locis fideiussorem [licet] accipere nisi in tribus: quando acceperis aliquid a rege; quando sacerdos accipit testamentum ab infirmo; et medicus ab egro.
- XLVIII. Tres sunt mutationes sine spe reuersionis, que dicuntur trý charrkewýn heb dat dewel: scilicet, mulier cum diuorcium fecerit a uiro suo; putatiuus uel filius, cum semel rationabiliter recessit a patre suo, id est, gwedy dýwather; uir hereditarius, si fuerit in alio dominio, quando reuertetur ad propria [de] iure non amplius retrorsum.
- XLIX. Tria sunt mortua testimonia, que dicuntur teýr maru testolýayth, que bene possunt stare in iudicio: primum, scilicet, cum [lis] orta fuerit de quadam terra, et rationabiliter terminata publice fuerit coram omnibus; postquam illi omnes qui fuerunt presentes fuerint mortui, filii eorum, uel nepotes eorum, uel alii de progenie eorum possunt testimonium perhibere super hiis que audierunt a parentibus suis; et hii dicuntur gwebedyeyth [testes conscii]: secundum est, cum aliquis per nobiles prouintie ex utraque parte, qui dicuntur amhýnyogeu týr [finitimi terre], per generis deriuationem, id est, per hach et edryt, affirmando et testificando ius suum poterit adipisci: tertium est, cum uiderit lapidem, qui dicitur pentan uayn [lapis focarius], patris sui, uel aui, uel attau, uel proau, uel aliorum de genere suo, et loca edificiorum, et aree, et horrei, et terram arabilem: hec omnia testimonium perhibent ei super ius suum.
- L. Trý agcheuarch gwr [tria indubitata viri]: equus, et arma; et quicquid redditur ei de terra sua; et ea que in výnebwerth [precio faciei] habebit.
- LI. Tria sunt iacula pro quibus nichil redditur: ceruo; cani; pullo laciuo in ýt [segete].
- LII. Tria secreta colloquia debet rex sine iudice habere: cum sacerdote; cum muliere; cum medico.
- LIII. Tres sunt acus legales: acus opertricis regine; et acus medici curandi uulnera; et acus penkenýt [prefecti venatorum] ad curandos canes uulneratos: pro unaquaque illarum III^o. denarii legales; ceterarum uero opertricum denarius legalis.
- LIV. Teýr kýfrýnach [tria secreta] que non debent ab aliquo celari, sed potius ab omnibus manifestari: proditio regis uel domini sui, id est, brat; et kýnlluýn [insidie]; et interfectio parentum suorum.

LV. Tres homines non sunt occidendi: scilicet, rex; sacerdos; et kerdaur [ioculator]; et ideo galanas eis secundum leges non est constitutum.

LVI. Tria sunt animalia que dicuntur untroydyauc [unipedes]: scilicet, equus; accipiter; gellchý [molossus]: siquis fregerit pedem illorum cuiuslibet, reddat precium eius ex toto.

LVII. Tres sunt partus unius precii ut pretium matrum: scilicet, partus molose, id est, gellast, si furatur, siue unus sint siue plures; et partus suis dum sit arethelc [in suili], siue unus siue plures sint; et partus accipitris, siue unus siue plures sint.

LVIII. Tres sunt sues in grege porcorum eiusdem precii, retinentes precium legale per totum annum, id est, xxx^s. denarios: scilicet, uerres gregis; sus maior in grege; cenalis sus, que seruatur ad cenam regis: nemo debet capere [ullum] illorum trium, nec in horreo, nec in horto, nec in quocunque loco detrimentum faciant.

LIX. Omnis camposus edificator a siluano herede tria edificii ligna debet habere, uelit nolit: scilicet, nenbren [tecti trabem]; et dwe nenforch [duas tecti furcas].

IX. DE TERMINATIONE TERRARUM ET UILLARUM.

i. Curia debet terminare terminos suos præ omnibus, et super eam nemo; postea ecclesia; postea libertas, id est, breynt; postea kýnwarchadw [prior possessio]: sed cum curia terminauerit, mayr et kýmellaur [prepositus et cancellarius] debent terminare, et terminos iurando affirmare, si sciant; si non, diuidant illud de quo dubietas est in duo inter uillas que littigant.

ii. Cum quedam uilla terminet aliam, non debet rantýr [particulam] auferre cum termino.

iii. Rex debet habere dimidium libre de qualibet terminacione que sit inter duas uillas.

iv. Iudices uero xxⁱⁱⁱⁱ^s. denarios, si terra adiudicata fuerit alicui.

v. De qualibet rantýr [particula] rex habebit dimidium libre.

vi. Si uilla adiudicata fuerit de qua sit swýd [officium], rex ab eo habebit libram et dimidium.

vii. Si pater alicuius habuerit domum, aut horreum, aut siccarium, aut dýnhat, aut dodýn, cum aratione, in aliqua terra; uel si alius habuerit supradicta, et dadanhut [actionem possessoriã] postulauerit, de iure debet mitti in possessionem paternam, id est, dadanhut, de his que patris sui prius extiterant, donec annonam messuerit, et donec uerta [uerterit] dorsum suum ad cumulum annone; et post in ix^o. die kalendarum Nouembris dabit responsum, et in secundo nono iudicium.

viii. Cum terram calumpnietur nono die Nouembrium, reus debet habere spatium usque ad nonum diem Maii: si autem infra hunc terminum non habeat iudicium, oportet eum iterum eam calumpniari nono die Maii, si iudicium habere uelit.

ix. Cum terram calumpnietur nono die Nouembrium, reus debet habere spatium quindecim dierum, ut querat amicos suos; postea aliorum xv^o. dierum, dum accipiat consilium; et si aliquis ex cognatis suis sit in aliena patria, tempus expectandi eum habebit usque ad kalendas Februarium: postea per totum tempus ueris arandum est, et non oportet placitis intendere usque ad kalendas Maii.

x. Eodem modo, si nono die kalendarum Maii terram calumpnietur, et non sit iudicium usque ad Augustum, postea non oportet placitis intendere ante nonum diem Nouembrium.

xi. Dadanhut [si actio possessoria] adiudicetur alicui, [qui] cum onere dorsi ad terram uenerit, tribus diebus ac noctibus manebit quietus; in tercio calumpnietur ille eum [reum], et habebit responsum in tercio, et iudicium in nono.

xii. Si dadanhut [actio possessoria] adiudicetur alicui, et uenerit cum palustro, id est, carr, quinque diebus et noctibus quietus sine clamore sit ibi; in quinto habebit responsum, et in nono iudicium.

xiii. Cuicumque dadanhut [actio possessoria] a iure iudicetur, nullus illum iure poterit alius expellere nisi proprie hereditarius, quia secundus dadanhut [hereditarius] non expellit primum.

xiv. Nullus improprius, id est, arehoýth, expellit alium improprium; et si duo hereditarii contenderint, nullus eorum iure poterit alium expellere.

xv. Sic declaratur placitum regis terre: primo calumpniatores debent extendere illorum calumpniam; deinde defensores eorum defensionem ostendant; et secundum hoc debent maiores patrie, id est, henŕyeyth gwelat, considerare diligenter simul qui illorum uerum affirmant et qui non : et postquam maiores natu recitauerint sententiam, tunc debent soli iudices exire separatim, et iudicare secundum hoc quod recitauerint maiores natu ; et quod iudicauerint iudices debent regi extendere [ostendere].

xvi. Sic terminatur placitum mete in terra regis et terra ecclesie : bacculus et euangelium debent metam facere, id est, qui diutius terram custodiunt ; si eiusdem dignitatis fuerint, et tamdiu custodiunt, unusquisque iuramento affirmant metam suam, et postea diuidant per medium.

xvii. Si duo domini habuerint flumen in metam, et arbor per medium fluminis ceciderit, et si contentio fuerit orta inter eos uterque eorum potius instrumenta ad arborem illam tendere debeat, de iure illius est terra in qua arbor creuerit.

xviii. Si quis fregerit metam terre que fuerit inter duas uillas, reddat domino iii^{ss} . uaccas camlury, et possessori terre iiii^{ss} . denarios legales ; et iterum facere metam sicut ante fuit.

xix. Qui uiam publicam uel fossam termini arauerit x^{ss} . solidos reddat.

xx. Qui inceperit litem contra aliquem intendere, et aduersarius eius paratus fuerit respondere, actor autem litem omittens per annum integrum et unum diem, licet postea litem intendat, nil a reo iure consequitur.

X. DE TESTIBUS RENUENDIS.

i. Qui testimonium offert super aliquem, non debet iurare donec ducat suum testimonium sicut ius est, et postea iuret ; et ille qui renuit, antequam iuret, accipiat reliquias a manu eius, et iuret quod falsum est testimonium eius, cum iuramento, sicut ius est testimonium, et dicat causam renuendi ; et tunc iudices causam si ydonea sit uideant : si autem ante testificationem renuerit, perdat causam suam.

ii. Siquis testes prouocauerit, et eosdem producere non poterit, litem amittet.

iii. Gwebedyeyth [testes conscii] in omni loco uice testium tenent, et tantum ualent in causa quantum testes.

iv. Siquis testes reprobauerit antequam iurent eo ipso, admittuntur contra eum.

v. Reprobatur quidem testis de causis : scilicet, pro fide uiolata ; pro sacramento uiolato, id est, periurio ; et si iure [iuret] sua propria testimonium ; uel si rei illius pro qua testimonium fert particeps fuerit ; uel pro pretio ; uel pro timore alicuius potentis ; uel amore amici, uel odio inimici : et si una causarum istarum nota fuerit, eadem potest reprobari.

vi. Reprobatur item testis hiis tribus de causis : si dictum est, et infamia fuerit, quod cum uxore rem habuerit contra quem producitur ; et si fur denotatus fuerit, id est, lleydŕ keuadef ; et si aliquem de parentela sua interfecerit, et hoc ipse prius conquestus fuerit coram plebe ecclesie, uel in consistorio domini, id est, dadylua, nec inde ius consecutus fuerit.

vii. Cum uero terra terminanda sit, non oportet expectare nonum diem alicujus mensis ad eam terminandam ; sed quando regi placuerit et optimatibus.

viii. Si contingat quod ecclesia edificetur in uilla rusticana sumpta a rege licentia, et in ea missa celebretur, et corpora ibi sepeliantur, extunc uilla illa libera erit : quando accipiat, reddat regi dimidium libre.

ix. Si uillanus regis suscipiat filium optimatis ad nutriendum, ex licencia regis et consilio gentis sue, ille filius debet habere partem hereditatis cum filiis uillani post mortem eius.

XI. DE DIUISIONE TERRARUM.

i. Tribus uicibus debet terra diuidi : primo inter fratres ; secundo inter consobrinos ; tercio inter filios consobrinorum : sed ultra de iure non diuidatur.

ii. Cum fratres inter se diuidant hereditatem, iunior debet habere tygdŕn, id est, edificia patris sui, et viii^{ss} . acras de terra, si habuerint.

iii. Ipse debet habere istas tres res quas, filio minori uiuente et mortuo patre, restituere potest si date sunt a patre in pignore usque in nonum diem, et que sunt trŕy thelws kenedŕl [tria cimelia generis] : sic uero potest redimere in nono, et in decimo, et usque infinitum temporis : res uero hec sunt : callaur [caldarium] ; et chwlltŕr [culter] ; et bwayll kŕnnut [securis lignorum].

iv. Quilibet fratrum debet habere viii^{ss} . acras et locum tygdŕn [edificii].

v. Junior debet diuidere hereditatem inter fratres ; senior autem primo eligere ; postea secundum etatem eligant usque ad iuniorem.

VI. Progenies que terram suam inter se non diuiserit, licet non sit nisi unus [hereditarius] solus, sed ille terram solus habebit, nisi ipse denegauerit ea que rex debet habere de terra illa; et quantum ipse non occupauerit rex ut suum possidebit.

VII. Si uero progenies que terram suam inter se diuiserit, et eius una pars forte defecerit, partis deserte rex ipse heres permanebit: et si quis diu peregre fuerit, cum redierit habebit a rege et a confratribus terre patrimonium suum, si pro eo stare uoluerit et illud defendere poterit; dat atamen pretium custodiendi, si habere uoluerit, scilicet, dimidium libre.

VIII. Qui passus fuerit regem patrimonium suum dare alteri ipso presente, et omni prohibente, quamdiu uixerit eo iure carebit, nec illius proles de cetero recuperabit.

IX. Ne dodŷr de gan nebun dŷaspat ȳnllŷs [nec cuiquam competit quiritationem facere in curia], nisi quando denegatur ei ius et iudicium de hereditate sua in placito domini sui, et si nonus fuerit de parentela sua, que forsitan tota periit preter ipsum.

X. Si quis ter uocatus fuerit ad respondendum alicui de terra, et ipse non ueniat, si non sit retentus aliqua ȳdonea causa, terra illa debet dari ei qui eam calumpniatus fuerit: si autem secunda uel tertia uice uenerit, reddat 111^o. uaccas camlurŷ, eo quod uenire neglexerit ad prefixum terminum, scilicet, prima uel secunda uice.

XI. Siquis reddat kŷnhasset [honorarium] de terra, nil reddere debet in obitu suo, id est, in ebedŷw.

XII. Quicumque calumpniatur terram per parentelam, id est, hach ac edrŷf, oportet seniores patrie scire parentelam illam, et iuramento eam affirmare antequam respondeatur ei.

XIII. Quisquis terram alienam tenuerit per tres generationes, id est, teŷr hoŷss rehenŷ, in eadem patria cum eis qui eam calumpniatur, post tantum spatium sine appellatione, id est, haul, et sine domus combustione, et sine aratri fractione, non cogitur respondere de ea; lex enim clausa est inter eas.

XIV. Quisquis dŷv [diu] in exilio moram faciens tandem repatriauerit, et ab amicis et cognatis partem querat hereditatis, si concedant ei partem, debent [habere] ab eo dimidium libre, id est, pretium custodiendi.

XV. Si rex dederit terram alicui rationabiliter, filius eius non potest auferre ei terram illam, licet uelit.

XVI. Propter dolum regis et kŷnlluŷn [insidias] debet homo amittere hereditatem suam.

XVII. Sciendum est quod lex de terra regis non clauditur in minori spacio quam centum annis.

XVIII. Si quis arauerit terram interdictam ex parte domini regis, possessor terre debet habere ab eo 111^o. denarios legales eo quod terram suam aperuerit; et 111^o. denarios legales eo quod deposuerit aratrum de terra sua; et de qualibet gleba subuersa, id est, chwŷss, habebit denarium; et si glebe numerari non possunt, mensura pedis accipiatur pro gleba. Rex uero habebit omnes boues, cum aratro, et uomere, et cultro, et precium dextri pedis aratoris, et dextre manus stimulatoris bouum, id est, geylwat. Hoc reddit qui alterius terram arauerit.

XIX. Siquis aperuerit terram alienam, et abscondens in ea aliquid, illud quod absconditur habebit possessor terre illius, si non sit thesaurus; omnis enim thesaurus regis est.

XX. Siquis ultra tres noctes in possessione alicuius sine licencia manserit, amittat totum quod habet.

XXI. Si homo episcopi uel abbatis cum homine regis certauerit in terra regis, regis est dŷruŷ eorum.

XXII. Si duo homines episcopi uel abbatis in terra regis certauerint, regis est dŷruŷ eorum.

XXIII. Siquis anhel [laqueum] fecerit in terra aliena, et infodiat eam, domino terre illius reddat 111^o. denarios legales eo quod terram eius aperuerit; et animal, si quod in eo capiatur, domini terre est: regi uero 111^o. uaccas camlurŷ.

XXIV. Siquis foueam trituratorii, id est, pwll odŷn, in aliena terra sine licencia foderit, 111^o. denarios legales reddet domino agri.

XXV. Si tale trituratorium comburatur, 111^o. denarii legales pro eo redduntur.

XXVI. Si quis domum edificauerit in terra aliena sine licencia, reddat regi 111^o. uaccas camlurŷ: domum uero habebit possessor terre.

XXVII. Siquis rete miserit in aqua sine licencia, rete habebit terciam partem et heres [terre] duas.

XXVIII. Siquis calumpniatur terram pertinentem ad ecclesiam, si mater ecclesia sit non erit expectandus nonus dies alicuius mensis.

XXIX. Nemo debet habere principalem sedem ex parte matris, id est, penkeueystet, nec dignitatem aliquam, id est, swýd, si sit ex parte patris qui debeat habere, licet aliqua pars terre ei concedatur ex parte matris; sed tamen dignius est quod aliquis ex parte matris habet ea quam aliquis alienus.

XXX. Quando uillanus hereditatem suam a rege accipit, de unaquaque rantýr [particula] rex debet habere LX. denarios.

XXXI. Sciendum est quod si femina quedam prebeat sese uiro absque licencia gentis sue, non oportet quod proles eius habet partem hereditatis cum gente materna, nisi eorum gratia.

XXXII. Si mulier indigena detur exuli, filii eius partem hereditatis habebunt, preter sedem principalem. Ex tali coniugio nascuntur gwarthec dýuach [vacce stemmatis defecti] hoc modo: si ex muliere indigena et ex marito suo exule nascitur aliquis qui hominem occidat, pars matris reddat galanas; quia pater eius non habet amicos super quos diuidat precium eius: et si de terra regis fuerit mater, tota proles erit regis.

XII. DE OCTO PÝNUEÝRCH [EQUIS SARCINARIIS] REGIS.

I. Octo sunt pýnueýrch [equi sarcinarii] regis, semper enim cumulant bona ad opus regis: scilicet, mare, desertum regis, pauper extraneus terram regis pertransiens, latro, mortuus subita morte, mortuus de quo habeat ebedýw, et dýruý, et camlure.

XIII. DE CENA ET PROCURATIONE REGIS.

XXX. Pretium captiui de ultramarinis partibus libram et dimidium ualet.

- xxxI. Si autem ex hac insula sit, libra est pretium eius.
- xxxII. Dicit lex quod membra cuiuslibet hominis eiusdem precii sunt; sic ergo membrum regis eiusdem precii et membrum uillani: sed, tamen, maior est iniuria regis uel optimatis quam uillani cum membrum eius absciditur.
- xxxIII. Siquis cum lancea alterius interfecerit hominem, tertia pars de galanas cadit super lanceam: eodem modo et de omnibus armis.
- xxxIV. Cum ergo uenerit aliquis ad placitum regis, uel ad alium locum in quo rex et optimates insimul fuerint, dicat, "Hic pono arma mea in pace Dei et regis, nequis ea surripiat ad aliquod malum faciendum." Et si testes inde habuit, quamuis cum armis suis aliquis occidatur, non est culpandus, neque aliquid de galanas cadit super arma.
- xxxv. Si socius tuus una uice percusserit hominem, uel cum lancea pupugerit, tu nil solues quum subitum factum est; si autem amplius paciaris, culpandus es.
- xxxvi. Siquis arma sua non suspenderit altius quam sit caput hominis stantis, et in ea quis uulneratus fuerit, arma sint uulnerati, uel dimidium reddat: is cuius fuerit terra totum reddat.
- xxxvii. Si quis arma sua accommodauerit, et eis aliquis uulneratus fuerit uel occisus, dimidium reddat: mutuuum autem accommodatum semper reddatur.
- xxxviii. Siquis contra regem superbe uel turpiter loquitur, reddat III^s. uaccas camlurý dupliciter.

XVIII. SEPTEM SUNT DOMUS EPISCOPALES IN DEUETH [DIMETIA].

- I. Meneuia est sedes principalis in Cambria.
- II. Lan Ýssan in Roa.
- III. Egluýs Degemman, [hodie Rhos Crowther].
- IV. Egluýss Hussilt, [Llan Usyllt].
- V. Egluýss Teylau et Teuledauc, [Llan Deilo, et Llan Deulydog].
- VI. Egluýss Hwadeýn, [Llan Huadein].
- VII. Egluýss Kenew, [Llan Genau].
- VIII. Abbates Teylau, et Teuledauc, et Ýsmaelis, et Degemman tenentur esse clerici siue ordinati.
- IX. Ebedýw cuiuslibet illorum domino Dývet [Dimetie] erit, id est, XII. libre, uel qui illis successerint reddant.
- X. Meneuia, quia prima est, ab omni debito soluta [est].
- XI. Ecclesia Kenew et ecclesia Hwssilth, quia terris carent, ab illo debito libere erunt.
- XII. Qui sanguinolentam fecerit unam predictarum sedium, sex libras reddat ei, et lauatricem de genere suo in obprobrium generis sui et in memoriam redditionis.
- XIII. Nemo Meneuensem antistitem sine ipso presente uel suis canonicis iudicare presumit.

XIX. DE LEGE PUELLARUM ET FEMINARUM.

- I. Si quis ducat uxorem datam ei a gente sua, et infra septennium eam dimittat, reddat ei suum egwedý [dotem suam].
- II. Si uero post septennium dimittatur, de omni substantia debet habere dimidium, nisi uir per aliam libertatem possit plus habere.
- III. De prole duas partes debet uir procurare, scilicet, maiorem et minorem; mater uero terciam.
- IV. Si insimul fuerint usque ad alterius obitum sine herede, in duo diuidatur tota substantia, scilicet, dimidium uiro, et dimidium uxori.
- V. Injuria femine maritate secundum breýnt [privilegium] uiri sui redditur.
- VI. Si maritus eius occidatur, primo redditur sayrhaed, deinde pretium eius: sed de sayrhaed eius coniux debet habere partem ut frater.

vii. Siquis acceperit uxorem, et dederit ei dotem, et postea inpregnauerit, et antequam pariet dimissa sit, reputabitur illud tempus ei pro nutritione a quo dimissa est: ipsa uero nutriet infantem, uelit nolit, per annum et dimidium: ipse uero dabit ei pro nutritione ouem fetam cum uellere et agno, deinde patellam ferream uel iiii^{o} . denarios, deinde monocria frumenti ad faciendum ei pulmentum uel rýnnýon [farinam avenaceam crassiorem], deinde tria palustra de lignis, deinde duas ulnas de albo panno ad cooperiendum eum uel iiii^{o} . denarios, deinde nutrici eius duas ulnas de panno radiato uel xii . denarios, deinde uaccam fetam cum uitulo, deinde tria palustra, scilicet, unum de frumento, alium de ordeo, tertium de auena: hec omnia matri debentur reddi si illa uoluerit.

viii. Si qua pregnans abortium fecerit a quarto die usque ad mensem integrum, ille cuius culpa hoc factum fuerit quartam partem precii eius secundum nobilitatem reddet; et propter hoc uocatur gwayth kýndelwaut [sanguis ante formationem], quia nondum sit formatus.

ix. Si in secundo, uel in tercio, uel in quarto mense fecerit, terciam partem precii eius secundum nobilitatem reddet.

x. Siquis fecerit in quinto mense, uel post animatum onus fuerit, dimidium precii eius reddet.

xi. Si quis cum muliere tribus diebus et tribus noctibus aperte et coram omnibus dormierit, et ita uadit in lectum antequam cooperiatur ignis, et non surrexerit ab ea mane donec discooperiatur ignis, tria animalia eiusdem longitudinis auris et cornu debet mulier habere a uiro [de] illo iudicio si ab eo dimissa est; et totidem habebit si qua in rapinam ierit: et talis lex est earum que datoribus carent, sed proprio consilio taliter agunt.

XX. DE SEPARATIONE UIRI ET MULIERIS.

i. Si mulier habuit datorem uel datores, sub dote sint usque ad vii^{o} . annos; et si tres habuerint de septimo anno noctes, omnis substantie eius medietatem mulier de iudicio habebit.

ii. Siquis uxorem suam sine lege dimiserit et aliam superduxerit, iuditio domini uenire debet, et femina repudiata in domo esse propria usque ad nonum diem; et in illa die, si dimissa sit, omnia que illius sunt de domo prius exeant, et post ultimum numerum ipsa de domo exeat.

iii. Vir habebit omnes sues; mulier oues: vir habebit omnes equos et equas, boues et uaccas, iuuenos et iuuenas; mulier capras.

iv. Postea suppellex sic diuidatur: omnia uasa lactis preter unum bayol [multrale] mulieris sunt; et omnes disci preter unum uernum, id est, kýcdýschil, uiri sunt: palustrum uero et iugum unum mulieris sunt; omnia dolia et omnia uasa potus uiri sunt.

v. De uestimento lecti uir habebit omnes uestes que subtus sunt; mulier que supra.

vi. Postquam aliam duxerit uxorem, uir debet mittere uestimenta lecti mulieris quam repudiauit.

vii. Vir habebit caldarium, et brecchan [tegetem], et pluuiar, et nýthlen [linteum uentilatoris], et cultrum, et securim lignorum, et terebrum, et retentaculum, et falces omnes preter unam falcem, et cratem: mulier habebit patellam et tripodem, dolabrum et cribrum, uomerem et unam falcem, linum et lini semen, et trýchwt [loculum], preter aurum et argentum; que duo si fuerint, id est, thelesseu, in duo equalia diuidantur: tela si fuerint, in duo equalia diuidantur tam linea quam lanæ.

viii. Vir habebit horreum et annonam, et quicquid super terram et in terra continentur, et gallinas, et omnes aucas, et unum cattum; et si plures fuerint, omnes mulieris sunt preter unum, ut supradictum est: mulier habebit carnem salsatam et iacentem super terram, et caseum recentem super terram; sed postquam eleuantur carnes et casei, nil de illis mulier de iure habebit. Vas butýri, si non sit plenum, mulier habebit, et pernam similiter si non fuerit integra, et caseum si non fuerit integrum, et tantum de farina quantum ipsa poterit inter manus suas ferre de cella in domum cum genu fortitudine: vnusquisque habeat uestimenta sua congrua preter pallia, que diuidi debent.

ix. Et postquam sic egerint si uir aliam duxerit uxorem, sit ipsa libera a uiro suo, id est, dílyss; quia de iure nullus uir debet habere duas uxores.

x. Siquis dimiserit uxorem suam, et postea eum facti penituerit, et illa a primo libera alteri uiro data sit, si potest prior uir eam attingere habentem unum pedem in lecto cum alio uiro et alterum pedem ultra lectum, prior uir de iure debet eam habere.

xi. Siquis duxerit puellam in llatruth [rapinam], et dicat puella "Quantum mihi dabis?" Et ille dixit tantum, firmans illud fide sua uel super reliquias, et postea negauerit; accipiat puella reliquias et iuret quod tantum promiserat ei: et sic nullo modo potest contradici, quia testimonium eius testimonium est.

xii. Siquis duxerit uxorem quam putauerit esse uirginem et inuenerit eam corruptam, et secundo eam cognouerit, et cum ea usque mane dormierit, nil de iure puelle potest ei auferre: si uero postquam nouit surrexit ad nuptiales uiros, et eis testificauerit, nil ei de iure debet reddere.

xiii. Si in crastina temptet eam et contradicit femina, tunc consideratur eius etas; si matura sit in pilis et uberibus, et si uenerint muliebria eius, septem de proximis ei cognatis cum utroque parente eam purgent, eodem modo si matura sit.

xiv. Si pro certo habeatur corrupta, seccetur camisia eius ante et retro, et bubulus unius anni inuncta cauda tradatur; si in manu eius permanserit, sit ei pro dote.

xv. Vxor optimatis potest dare camisiam suam, et clamidem, et peplum, et subtalares, farinam, lac, et butyrum, et caseum sine licentia mariti sui; omnemque suppellectilem domus sue potest commodare.

xvi. Vxor uillani nil potest dare sine licentia uillani nisi mitram suam, nec commodare nisi cribrum quo possit audiri stans in limine domui sue dum propter illud clamet.

xvii. Quamuis puella eat in llatrut [rapinam] cum uiro sine licencia parentum suorum, illi tamen cum suo domino eam passim retrahere licet inuitam, sed cum suo iure: tunc etiam non cogetur pater eius mercedem reddere.

xviii. Si femina eat in llatrut [rapinam] que ante uirum cognouerit, hec potest cum suo uiro inuitis parentibus remanere; sed ubicunque eius sit mansio, ibi merces eius querenda est.

xix. Si quis uiolenter puellam cognouerit, reddat domino mercedem et dýruý: puelle uero suam iniuriam, et egwedý [dotem], et edýlesruýt [evictionem] det.

xx. Si autem uir uiolentiam negat et mulier hoc affirmare uelit, capiat eius membrum pudibundum in leua manu, reliquias uero in dextra, et iuret quod cum membro illo uim ei intulerit; sicque nil perdet.

xxi. Siquis uim intulerit puelle uel femine que sola ambulat et negauerit, det iuramentum quinquaginta uirorum, quorum tres erunt continentes et abstinentes a carne et equitatione; si uero confessus fuerit, puelle uel femine reddet ius suum et quietam clamabit: regi uero reddet uirgam argenteam altam usque ad os eius, ita grossam sicut [digitum] medicum eius, et cýphum aureum super uirgam in quo possit sustineri plenus potus regi, ita spissum sicut unguis aratoris pollicis qui per septennium aratrum tenuerit.

xxii. Si due femine sole ambulauerint, et inde passe fuerint, nil de iure consequentur: si uero socium habuerint secum ambulantem, licet paruum puerum, dummodo non feratur in dorso, ius suum plenarie habebunt.

xxiii. Si mulier lectum uiri sui sine causa reliquerit, antequam a uiro suo iterum in lecto recipiatur iii^o. uaccas camlurý reddat ei, eo quod dominus eius est.

xxiv. Si mulier uiro uerbum irrogauerit uerecundum, id est, geýr kewýlýt, iii^o. uaccas camlurý ei reddat, quia dominus eius est.

xxv. Si sine causa a uiro suo mulier uapulauerit, secundum dignitatem suam ei iniuriam uir suus reddat.

xxvi. Quisquis coniugem alicuius uerberauerit, uir eius habebit dimidium sayrhaed.

xxvii. Siqua mulier habuerit rem turpem cum alio uiro osculo, id est, cussan, quartam partem sayrhaed ei reddet, nisi in ludo qui dicitur llawan [iocosus]; et in conuiuio; et quando aliquis de longe uenerit: similiter et de govissiau [contrectata]: qui autem coitum fecerit, totum restituet sayrhaed.

xxviii. Si femina habens maritum de alio infametur, si tamen incertum sit, septem mulierum manu se expurget; si iterum eodem modo infametur, iuramento xx^oiiii^o. mulierum manu se expurget; si tercis uice cum quadam certitudine hoc affirmetur, iuramento quinquaginta mulierum manu se expurget.

xxix. Hec infamia tribus modis oritur: scilicet, siquis uiderit de luco uenientem, uirum autem ex alia parte luscii eiusdem eadem hora egredientem; uel si uisi fuerint sub uno pallio; uel si uir uisus fuerit inter femora eius.

xxx. Adulter si negauerit adulterium, det iuramentum quinquaginta uirorum.

xxxi. Tribus de causis potest femina habere suum egwedý [suam dotem], licet ipsa uirum relinquat: scilicet, si sit leprosus uir; et si habeat fetidum anhelatum; et si cum ea concumbere non possit.

xxxii. Si mulier opposuerit alicui uiro quod uis ei illata sit ab eo, et ille negauerit, et si contradictio fuerit inter eos, mulier debet habere ab eo lw gweyllit [iuramentum voluntarium]; et si mulier fecerit iuramentum contra, id est, gwrthung, debent ire in nouam domum sub nigro panno, et coram omnibus debet uir probare si possit an non.

xxxiii. Tria sunt que non possunt mulieri auferri licet ob suam dimittatur culpam: scilicet, cowýll [antipherna]; et argeuereu, id est, animalia que secum a parentibus adduxit; et animalia que redduntur pro vyneswerth [precio faciei], si maritus eius aliam cognouerit.

xxxiv. Si filia alicuius, uel neptis, uel alia que in custodia illius fuerit cum aliquo in rapinam ierit, pater reddet domino ius suum, siue auunculus eius sit, quia eam non custodiuit.

xxxv. Si femina eat, ipsa sola reddat ius suum, uel uir eius, uel qui eam rapuit.

xxxvi. Cum cowýllh reddatur cuidam puelle, si de illo non facit uoluntatem suam antequam a uiro suo mane surgat, communis erit inter eos.

xxxvii. Femina legaliter maritata ter habebit vyneswerth [precio faciei], si maritus eius aliam cognouerit: primo dimidium libre; secundo libram; tercio cum omni dote sua et iure suo libera discedat: uerum si ipsa hec ulterius paciatur, numquam habebit vyneswerth [precio faciei].

xxxviii. Si puella aliqua detur uiro et ibi dicat eam inuenisse corruptam, ipsa debet affirmare se esse incorruptam iuramento quinque hominum, id est, patris et matris, fratris et sororis, et suo proprio.

xxxix. Siquis ducat uxorem in llatruth [rapinam], et eam ad domum ducat cuiusdam optimatis, ille accipiat a uiro fideiussorem de mercede eius domino suo danda, aut ipse reddat, sed antequam insimul dormiant.

xl. Nemo debet dare feminam antequam accipiat fideiussorem de mercede eius domino suo danda.

xli. Triplex est pudor puelle: primus, cum pater suus, ea presente, dixerit se illam uiro dedisse; secundus, cum uiri lectum intrauerit; tercius, cum a lecto surgens inter homines uenerit: et ideo pro primo datur amwabýr [amobragium]; pro secundo cowýllh [antipherna]; pro tercio egwedý [dos], si relicta fuerit.

[LEGES HOWELI BONI.]

*Dei gratia atque providentia, rex Howel, qui cognominatur da [bonus], totius Wallie principatu presidebat pacifice; qui, cum Wallenses suis legibus abuti et contra easdem errare prospiceret, quippe quisque sibi fere statuebat jus quod volebat, elegit de quolibet pago sex viros, auctoritate et scientia pollentes, ad locum qui dicitur Ty Guyn [Domus Alba], quorum consilio diligenti examinatione leges antiquas partim approbavit, partim emendavit, partim penitus delevit, alias vero de novo condidit.

Promulgatis itaque legibus quas observari decreverat, auctoritatem suam eis impartivit, firmiterque eas et illibate jussit teneri; in tantum quod ipse et omnes secum qui aderant maledictionem Dei et suam et totius Wallie ei imprecari sunt quicumque eas de cetero in Wallia non observaret.

Virtutis vere custos rigidusque satelles.

Hee leges medie temperateque consistunt; in quibus nil ultra modum nec citra esse permisit, memorans illud [H]oratii:

Est modus in rebus; sunt certi denique fines,
Quos ultra citraque nequit consistere rectum.

XXVI. DE JURE SACERDOTIS FAMILIE.

i. Sacerdos familie habebit terciam partem de omnibus decimis que ad regem pertinent.

ii. Am wart offeriat [pro contumelia sacerdoti illata] xii. denarii a delir [reddentur]; y deupart yr brennin ar trayan idau enteu [due partes regi, et triens sacerdoti].

iii. Ipsius sunt oblationes in tribus precipuis, et oblationes regis semper.

iv. Injuria ejus judicio ecclesie punietur.

XXVII. DE JURE GOSTEGUR [SILENTIARII].

i. Gostegur [silentiarius] debet habere quatuor denarios de unaquaque vacca que in dirwy venerit; et debet habere partem viri cum omnibus swydwyr [ministri]; et si non redduntur vacce, de omni dirwy et camlwry iiii. denarios debet habere.

ii. Kemellvr [constrictor] debet habere iiii. denarios legales de omni vacca, et duos denarios de omni uncia, que venerint regi in tributum.

XXVIII. DE REPULSIS A MARI.

i. Quodcumque mare duxerit ad terram, relinque ibi, donec mare impleverit se et siccet se ter.

ii. Si nullus a rege venerit propter illud, tolle tecum.

XXIX. DE JURE MEDICI CURIALIS.

i. Medicus curie, si jussu regis aliquem curialem vulneratum sanaverit, vestes vulnerati sanguinolentas habebit, id est, guaydwysac, et a rege indumentum superius, cum eum postea prius viderit.

XXX. DE POETA FAMILIE.

i. Bard teilu [poete familie], in die quo acceperit servitium suum, rex debet dare ei citharam, et regina anulum; et illa munera a se non debet dare.

XXXI. DE PENKERD [MUSICO PRIMARIO].

i. Penkerd [musicus primarius] debet habere munera nuptiarum a puellis, scilicet, xxiiii. denarios, et nichil a feminis.

ii. Primo debet cantare in aula.

iii. Non potest alius poeta petere aliquid in sua provintia absque ejus licentia.

XXXII. DE PRECONE.

i. Preco debet habere terram suam liberam et seyc [ferculum] de curia.

ii. Inter duas columpnas debet stare dum rex comederit, custodiendo aulam ab igne; postea cum servitoribus comedat; postea stet, et ne percutiat columpnam proximorem regi.

XXXIII. DE MAER BISSWEIL [PREPOSITO FIMI].

i. Maer y bissweil [prepositus fimi], quamvis injuriam habuerit a servitoribus regis, quando deferunt cibum et potum inter aulam et coquinam, nullum jus habebit.

XXXIV. HUC DE CURIA.

i. Huc usque de curialibus legibus ad regem et reginam pertinentibus, et eorum ministri; consequenter dicendum est de illis que ad curiam pertinent et ad patriam.

LIBER SECUNDUS.

SUMENTES EXORDIUM AD HIS QUE DICUNTUR TRES COLUMNÆ LEGIS: ID EST, TEIR COLOUYN KYUREITH: QUE SUNT NAU AFFEITH GALANAS [NOVEM AFFINIA HOMICIDII]; NAU AFFEITH TAN [NOVEM AFFINIA INCENDII]; NAU AFFEITH LLEDRAT [NOVEM AFFINIA FURTI].

I. DE TRIBUS COLUMNÆ JURIS.

Nau affeith galanas [novem affinia homicidii] sunt hec :

- i. Primum est, indicare ubi sit homo qui occiditur.
- ii. Secundum est, dare consilium de homine occidendo.
- iii. Tercium est, consentire homicidio.
- iv. Quartum est, esse edrychiat [spectator].
- v. Quintum, ire in consortio ad hominem occidendum.
- vi. Sextum est, cum illis villam intrare in qua sit homo ille.
- vii. Septimum est, adjuvare illos dum occiderint.
- viii. Octavum est, hominem impedire donec veniat qui eum occidat.
- ix. Nonum est, videre occisionem.
- x. Pro quolibet trium priorum de galanas ix. uncie argenti, cum juramento c. virorum effusionem sanguinis negando, reddi debent.
- xi. Pro quolibet trium secundorum, ix. uncie argenti duppliciter, cum juramento c. virorum laurudiauc [effusionem sanguinis] negando.
- xii. Pro quolibet trium ultimorum, ix. uncie tripliciter, cum juramento c. hominum negando laurudiauc [effusionem sanguinis].
- xiii. Si aliquis stat ubi aliquis occiditur, licet ad occidendum manus non extendat, tres vaccas gordwy [opis] et juramentum c. virorum negando prestabit.
- xiv. Qui hominem in exercitu occisum denegaverit, l. hominum juramentum et dimidium libre prestabit.
- xv. Siquis laurudiauc [effusionem sanguinis] fateatur, galanas omnino reddat.
- xvi. Galanas dividitur hoc modo: tertia pars super laurud [manum rubentem] constituitur, et due super genus suum: genus vero illas duas in tres iterum partes dividat: tertia pars super gentem maternam constituitur, et due partes ad gentem paternam usque ad vii. generationem, et postea a viris keinniauc paladyr [denarius lancee].
- xvii. Terciam partem que super laurud [manum rubentem] cadit pater suus et mater, necnon fratres et sorores, cum eo habent reddere, quia, si laurud [manus rubens] ille a gente interfecti occiditur, et galanas pro eo redditur, terciam partem de galanas pater recepturus est: similiter, si ipse mortuus fuerit antequam galanas reddatur, terciam partem pater pro eo reddat.
- xviii. Siquis cum lancea alterius hominem interfecerit, tertia pars de galanas super lanceam cadet: eodem modo de omnibus armis.
- xix. Cum vero venerit aliquis ad placitum, vel ad alium locum in quo rex et optimates fuerint, et dicat, "Hic pono arma mea in pace Dei et regis, ne quis ea ad aliquod malum perpetrandum accipiat:" si testes inde habuerit, quamvis cum armis suis [aliquis] occidatur, non erit causandus, nec super arma quicquam de galanas cadet.

II. DE TRIBUS DAMPNIS.

i. Tria sunt que dicuntur trichoet kenedyl [tria dampna generis]: primum est, cum parentela aliqua galanas pro aliquo reddit interfecto nec totum redditur, et ob hoc aliquis interficitur, nec iste interfectus redditur, nec quantum de galanas datum est restituitur: alterum est, cum occisor alicujus a gente non ab illa occisi interficitur, parentela tamen ipsius pro ipso interfecto reddet, nec minus ipsum cognatum amittet: tertium est, cum alicui alicquem occidisse imponitur, et ille aut ex indignatione aut negligentia illud non inficiatus occiditur, nichil pro illo reddetur; quia, ipso mortuo, parentela non poterit negare quod ille vivus non negavit: et hoc vocatur oergwyp galanas [subductio tristis homicidii].

III. NEGATIO HOMICIDII.

- i. Si imponitur alicui homicidium, quamvis innocens est, debet tamen erga terminum legalem purgare se juramento, et ostendere innocentiam suam.
- ii. Tempus siue terminus ad judicandum est, secundum legem, a xiiii^o. die, et deinceps, si non fuerint due gentes in una patria; tamen ante debent mittere nuntium de pace formanda.

III. Terminus legalis est ad iudicandum in uno cantref a nono die, et deinceps, si tamen miserunt nuntium de pace facienda.

IV. Terminus legalis est in uno kymut [comoto] ad iudicandum a tercio die, et deinceps, si tamen miserunt nuntium ante de pace.

IV. QUOMODO REDDITUR GALANAS.

I. Si redditur galanas, hoc modo reddi debet :

II. Si tota parentela sua in una regione cum illo fuerit, erga XIII. diem reddi debet totum.

III. Si parentela ejus dispersa fuerit in multis locis vel regionibus, debet habere inducias XIII. dierum, secundum numerum regionum.

V. DE JUDICIIS HOMICIDII [ET DE FACIENDO] ULTIONEM.

I. Detur respectus de homine interfecto ante sue ultionis licentiam.

II. Primo de homine qui de aliena patria mactatur : in prima septimana in qua sit mactatus iudicium interrogare debet ; et a primo interrogato usque ad xv. dies iudicium debetur expectare ; et si usque xv. dies iudicium non habetur, licitum est ultionem facere : de homine de uno pago : [in] tercio die [interrogetur iudicium ; et in nono iudicium expectetur ; et si non nono habetur,] licitum est ultionem facere : [de homine de uno comoto :] in tercio interrogetur iudicium ; et in vi°. [iudicium] accipere ; etsi non sexto habetur, postea licitum est ultionem facere.

VI. NAU AFFEITH TAN [NOVEM AFFINIA INCENDII].

Hec sunt nau affeith tan [novem affinia incendii] :

I. Primum est, dare consilium ut incendatur domus aliqua.

II. Secundum est, consentire incendiariis.

III. Tercium est, ire causa incendendi.

IV. Quartum est, portare rwyll [fomitum].

V. Quintum, lad tan [ignem clicere].

VI. Sextum est, cremium querere.

VII. Septimum, ignem sufflare.

VIII. Octavum, mittere ignem ubi comburat.

IX. Nonum est, videre combustionem.

X. Siquis aliquid istorum negaverit, juramenta l. virorum dabit, ex quibus tres erunt abstinentes a carnibus, equitatione, et mulieribus.

XI. Tres autem sunt ignes pro quorum combustione nichil redditur : scilicet, ignis godeith [accensus] in Marcio ; et ignis publici balnei cujusdam ville ; et ignis fabrice, si in spacio novem cubitorum a domibus ville fuerit edificata, et miricis, vel cespitibus, vel tabulis tecta.

XII. Domus in villa suo igne accensa et combusta proximam, ex utraque parte ab ea, domum combustam restituet.

XIII. Siquis in domo cum igne sibi accomodata ter eundem ignem accenderit, commodatarius ignem restaurabit.

XIV. Si quis dederit vel ferro excutiat ignem, dimidium dampni per ignem illati ad ignem pertinebit, et dimidium ad illum in illo operantem.

XV. Siquis in odin [tritatorio] sibi accomodato ignem accenderit, et ibi dimiserit, alius vero adveniens ligna imponendo ignem augmentaverit, et odin [tritatorium] comburatur, uterque mediando restituet : at si prior a secundo fidem acceperit de igne extinguendo, vel si ignem extinxit, ipse prior nichil reddet.

XVI. Pro negatione domus combuste juramentum XXIII. hominum dabitur, nisi in ea homo necatus sit.

XVII. Quod si fuerit juramentum l. hominum, cum uno [sit] qui equitare noluerit.

XVIII. Pro domo hyemali alicujus, si comburatur, libra redditur, et domino dirwy ; id est, XII. vacce.

XIX. Pro autumpnali, dimidium libre.

XX. Pro estivali, XL. denarii.

XXI. Pro hara porcorum, X. solidi.

XXII. Pro torallo, X. solidi.

XXIII. Pro domo annonae, id est, granario, X. solidi, et annonam quantum in ea sit reddere.

- xxiv. Pro molendino, x. solidi.
 xxv. Pro odin [tritatorio] regis, dimidium libre :
 xxvi. Optimatis, lx. [denarii] :
 xxvii. Eilt [advene], xliiii. :
 xxviii. Villani regis, xxx. :
 xxix. Villani optimatis, xxiiii. :
 xxx. Hoc de illis est intelligendum que piben [tubum] habent.
 xxxi. De aliis tercia pars precii cadet.
 xxxii. Pro odin [tritatorio] vero pwill [cavo] absque domo, iiii. denarii legales, si combustum fuerit : et tantum quando prius in terra aliena absque licentia possessoris fodiatur.
 xxxiii. Si quis combusserit aulam regis, xl. denarios de unoquoque retentaculo, id est, gauayl, quod tectum sustinet [reddat].
 xxxiv. Pro tecto, lxxx.
 xxxv. Pro aliis domibus, id est, godei, xx. denarios debet reddere sexies.

VII. DICTUM EST SUPERIUS, QUOD NULLUS DEBET JUDICARE NISI SCIAT ILLA TRIA QUE VOCANTUR TEIR COLOUYN KYUREITH [TRES COLUMNE LEGIS], ET PRETER HEC DEBET CAVERE ILLA QUATUOR QUE SUBVERTUNT JUDICIUM, QUE SUNT, VIDELICET, AMOR, ODIUM, MUNUS, TIMOR, NE ISTA QUERAT PLUSQUAM DOMINUM, QUI EST JUSTUS JUDEX.

I. Quicumque igitur contra judicem patrie contenderit, et ejus judicium injustum asseruerit, ambo vadimonia in manu regis tribuant, vel in manu ejus qui locum ejus tenuerit ; et ille qui locum tenet, qui eorum vadimonia accepit, debet illa vadimonia regi dare ; et tunc judex curie debet inter eos jussu regis judicare.

II. Quod [si] judex curie absens fuerit, rex debet eis aliquem judicem assignare qui inter eos possit judicare. Quod si judex de suo judicio convincitur, ejus judicium in primo cassabitur, et precium lingue sue regi reddat, et ultra non debet judicare : si vero alter convincatur, primo debet judici suum sarhaet reddere, et lingue sue precium regi restituere. Et nota, quod nullus debet judicare super refugium nisi judex refugii, neque super navem nisi rector navis, neque super curiam nisi judex curie, neque super patriam nisi judex patrie.

VIII. NAU AFFEITH LLEDRAT [NOVEM AFFINIA FURTI].

- I. Primum est, machinari furtum et socium querere.
- II. Secundum est, latrocinio consentire.
- III. Tercium est, viaticum dare.
- IV. Quartum, ire in comitatu et viaticum portare.
- V. Quintum est, villam intrare et domum vel bostar frangere.
- VI. Sextum est, arripere quod furtim aufertur.
- VII. Septimum est, die vel nocte cum furto ambulare.
- VIII. Octavum est, partem de furto accipere.
- IX. Nonum est, a latrone premium accipere.
- X. De furto nunquam fit contentio super aliquem nisi prius sit manac [delatio] cum juramento in tribus locis : scilicet, in hostio chori, coram presbitero ; in hostio cimiterii ; in hostio ecclesie : et hoc presbiter ille in placito testificatus sit, cujus verbo credendum est.

IX. QUOMODO PROBATUR FURTUM.

I. Siquis negaverit se furto abstulisse rem aliquam, et aliquis dixerit se eum cum re illa sole lucente super terram vidisse, et hoc alter negaverit, assumat secum sex viros de unoquoque kymvt [comoto] pagi sui, id est, xxiiii. ; et hoc llyu [manifestum] vocatur.

II. Si quis vaccam vel bovem negaverit de furto, det juramentum vii. virorum de suo genere ; scilicet, iiii. [erunt] ex parte patris, et duo ex parte matris, et ipse solus.

III. Siquis a latronibus rem furatam in terra non sua liberaverit, terciam [partem] rei liberate habebit ; dominus vero terre duas partes habebit.

X. DE UNO A FURTO LIBERO.

I. Vnus est homo liber a furto, quamvis sit captus cum furto in manifesto, scilicet, verus pauper ; et illud scitur a pluribus, et propter paupertatem furtum facit ; et per tres dies in villis mendicat, et quelibet villa vii. habet domos, et in illis nichil inveniret; et si in quarto die furtum faceret, ille secundum iudicium liber erit.

ii. Siquis hominem depredari dicitur, et ipse negaverit, l. hominum juramento habet negare.

iii. Si preda alicujus ad aliam patriam per werram rapitur, et postea quidam, de terra de qua preda ablata fuit, eat ad patriam ad quam preda venit aliquem eventum querens, et preda ablata de sua terra ei obuiaverit, et non haberet ibi aliquid nisi illam, et illam secum duceret, ipso veniente domum cum illa, si possessor prior prede de illa illum calumpniaverit, ibi est unus de locis in quo iudicium debet in duas partes partiri; scilicet, inter possessorem et viros, ex eo quod ipsi duxerunt de guerra ad pacem.

XI. DE MERCEDE FUREM DICTANTIS.

i. Quando quis pro mercede dictat furem qui rem alicujus furatus est, et hoc facit coram sacerdote modo predicto, mercedem habebit statim qui dictavit; et verbo sacerdotis testificantis, de dictatoris sacramentis, non contradicetur, et fur pro confitente habebitur; et dicitur hoc digaun veneki [delatio plena].

ii. Nullus propter dictum alterius debet vita seu membris condempnari.

iii. Dictum illius qui suspenditur, qui manifestat eum [virum] esse latronem, credendum est, sicut lege ista cautum est: est ergo talis condempnandus, non ad vitam vel membra perdenda, sed ad redemptionem sui faciendam: similiter, de illo latrone qui juramento in patria pro latrocinio constituto non poterit se purgare: erit uterque istorum lleydyr guerth [fur vendendus].

iv. In tempore Howeli boni pro unoquoque furto tal ar eil tal, id est, duplex redditio, erat; sed postea mutatum est de bove et vacca, equo et equa, ut juramento probarentur quantum valerent cum perditione, id est, amregoll.

v. Quicumque solverit equum a latronibus in una provintia cum possessore, jure debet habere iiii. denarios de unaquaque vacca quas valebit equus: similiter de vacca et bove, quicumque eos liberaverit in eadem provintia cum possessore iiii. denarios habebit; si in alia, viii.

vi. Hec sunt que furata hospiti non redduntur: scilicet, gladius; cultellus; bracee: quia tenetur ea hospes custodire.

XII. DE KYRCH [AGGRESSIONE].

i. Sciendum est quod kyrch [aggressio] cum paucioribus viris quam ix. fieri non dicitur.

ii. Ad negandum kyrch godeiviauc [aggressionem publicam], id est, kynlluyn [insidias], juramentum l. hominum prestatur.

iii. Kenllvyn [insidie] et murn [timor injectus], si negetur, juramento l. virorum dupliciter debet negari: si non negatur, dupliciter galanas reddat, et dupliciter peniteat.

XIII. DE LITE CORAM JUDICE.

i. Siquis stans coram iudice aliquem in causam traxerit, statim reus cogetur respondere, quia in lege ista dies deliberationis non est; actore autem intentionem fundante, nisi reus absque mora responderit, actor, testes provocans, attestabitur reum non negasse.

ii. Procedent iudices super hoc litis articulo disceptaturi: qui, sedentes, duos mittent ad actorem, interrogantes quos sibi testes nominaverit, et quid eis attestatus fuerit; quibus expositis a testibus, iterum querent an ipsi ab actore testes nominati fuerint, et quid ab illo eis attestatum, nulla tamen precedente examinatione; quia in hiis legibus examinatio non est usitata.

iii. Si testes inveniuntur cum actore concordantes, actor aliis idem attestabitur; reus vero aut tacebit, aut testes reprobabit, id est, excipiet.

iv. Si taceat, testes prefati viris nominatis attestabuntur reum sibi non contradicere.

v. Si reprobet, attestabuntur se intempestive reprobatos, id est, exceptos [esse], quibus per testes probatis in utroque articulo, contra reum sententiabitur.

vi. Verum si reus, meliori tramite incedens, testificantibus primis testibus dicat, "Licet verbo tenus testimonium proferatis, sacramento non certificabitis:" tunc testibus adjudicabitur sacramento juramenti attestaciones, secundum quod eis attestatum fuit, confirmare.

XIV. DE REPROBATIONE TESTIUM.

- I. Sciendum est, quod post prestitum sacramentum reus habet, si velit, testes reprobare, id est, contra testes excipere, quia, si ante, litem perdet.
- II. Reprobationis, id est, exceptionis, autem causa triplex est: vel quia inter eum et testes galanas denotari possit; vel quia de petitione hereditatis inter eos orta sit contentio; vel alteruter alterius uxore sit abusus.
- III. Quas causas si reus probaverit esse veras, testes adjudicabitur esse in defectu, et ipse in causa [judicium] optinebit; sin autem, contra ipsum sententiabitur.

XV. NUMERUS TESTIUM.

- I. In lege Romana reperitur, ubi numerus testium non diffinitur ibi duo sufficiunt.
- II. Dicit quoque lex unius testimonium non esse admittendum: hic vero dicitur, quod x. sunt homines quorum unicuique, et soli, inferendo testimonium credendum est.
- III. Siquis vero testes provocans eosdem producere non poterit, cadet a lite.

XVI. NOVENI SUNT QUORUM DICTIS CREDENDUM EST.

- I. Primus est, dominus inter suos homines; ita tamen ut non sit particeps litis et rei ex lite consequende, et confiteantur contentionem suam prius coram domino fuisse, et non fuerint un dull [univoci]; at si alter eorum negaverit, cum juramento negabit: in alio casu ix. dies dantur domino ad commemorandum qualiter juramentum prestiterit.
- II. Secundus est, abbas inter duos monachos suos.
- III. Tercius, pater inter duos filios suos.
- IV. Quartus, iudex de suo iudicio; scilicet, si quidam de suo iudicio quod inter eos iudex dederit dubitantes certaverint, id est, detkeinniat braut.
- V. Quintus, fidejussor de sua fidejussione.
- VI. Sextus, sacerdos de testimonio ei attestato.
- VII. Septimus, puella de virginitate sua, si alicui viro imposuerit se vi oppressam, et sic ab ipso defloratam.
- VIII. Octavus, pastor communis ville, id est, trefgord, et de animali ab alio inter animalia [confisa] sue custodie mortificato.
- IX. Nonus, latro ad patibulum ductus, et de morte sua certus; illius verbis de socio vel sociis credendum est.
- X. Decimus, amodwr yn yammot [compactior de compacto suo].

XVII. QUOMODO DEBET TERMINARI LITIS CALUMPNIA.

- I. Siquis litem ceperit intendere, reo presente et parato respondere, [et] deinde litem omittens per annum integrum et unum diem siluerit, [si] litem tamdiu sopitam velit suscitare, non audietur.
- II. Debitor principalis debitum non inficiatus absque contradictione habet solvere.
- III. At si dies solutioni fuerit prefixus, dies expectandus est.
- IV. Qui vero ante diem debitum petierit, plus petendi tempore argui poterit.
- V. Cedente die solutionis fidejussor diem habebit ad petendum principalem debitorem, id est, ychyuarch y chynegan.
- VI. Tres manus oportet convenire ad constituendum [ali]quem fidejussorem: scilicet, manus dantis; fidejussoris; et accipientis. Debitoris vero namium non capitur nisi fidejussor illud tradiderit.
- VII. Qui autem, inconsulta dominicali potentia, pro debito namium arripuerit, toto debito privabitur, et tres vaccas camlwry domino restituet.
- VIII. Postquam mortuus fuerit nil habens pro quo est fidejussor in mundo, reddat dimidium: similiter pro kynnocni [debitore] qui derelinquat patriam.
- IX. Fidejussor, licet solvendo existat pro debitore, minime tamen solvet antequam deficiat.
- X. Debitor vero, si defecerit dum iuri paruerit, de jure quidem, quamvis nichil plusquam tria indumenta habuerit, duo solvet, et tertium sibi retinebit: et sic semper aget donec penitus reddiderit.

XVIII. DE NEGATIONE FIDEJUSSORIS.

- I. Fidejussor, negans fidejussionem, cum septima manu amicorum sibi in redemptione proximorum negat.
- II. Si partim negat et partim profitetur, solius juramento jure stabitur.

XIX. QUALIS FIT FIDEJUSSOR.

- I. Nullus exul debet esse fidejussor; neque aliquis qui fortior sit illo; nec monachus, nisi abbate consentiente; nec filius, nisi patre consentiente, id est, donec terram a domino susceperit; nec scolarius, nisi magistro consentiente; nec femina, nisi sit femina principalis debitoria.
- II. Siquis nomine emptionis rem aliquam ab aliquo acceperit, [et] deinde ab hac vita ereptus res suas cum amicis reliquerit, cum ipse pro se de precio rei accepte reddendo fidejussor extiterit, ab amicis prefatis licet factum ignorantibus, et ob hoc diffidentibus de rebus mortui, precium rei sue venditor consequetur; jurabit tamen prius cum sex viris probatis de proximis suis super sepulcrum debitoris, si possit inveniri, sin autem, super altare dedicatum, quod illi rem suam vendiderit, et quod ipse pro se fidejussor fuerit.

XX. QUOT MODIS FIT DIRWY.

- I. De tribus fit dirwy: scilicet, de pugna; furto; treiss [rapina].
- II. Dupplex autem fit dirwy in curia et in ecclesia, et duplex camlwry.
- III. Que ecclesia, si summa fuerit et matrix, de pugna que in cimiterio ejus agitur XIII. libras habebit.
- IV. Si vero extra, id est, in villa, VII., quarum medietas abbati cedit, si legalis sit, id est, ecclesiastica doctrina instructus et litteratus, altera medietas presbitero et canonicis ibi Deo servientibus.
- V. Talis divisio fit inter abbatem et presbiteros de pugna illorum qui ab abbate et presbiteris refugium accipiunt.
- VI. Sicque dividitur omne quod tantummodo sancto non altari nec alii oblatum erogatur.
- VII. Tribus modis liber fit fidejussor: si post spatium datur sine ejus licentia; si redditur pro eo; si adauael [pignus] ducitur sine negatione. Si fidejussor fatetur esse in commercio, super illum primo veniet juramentum ut fateatur super quod fuit fidejussor: si totum negat quod non sit fidejussor, super kennogyn [debitorem] primo veniet juramentum; et si fidejussor contra juret kennogyn [debitorem], denegat illum cum VII. hominibus: si manu, id est, fide, confirmatur, commercio redditur, si non negatur: negatio est ejus bridwy. Juramentum VII. hominum similiter est negatio fidejussoris, si contra juretur vel fidejussori; et si non, non debet nisi juramentum ipsius solius super quod ponatur fidejussor.
- VIII. Nullum commercium est commercium sine fide vel fidejussore.
- IX. Quamvis fidejussor in fidejussione sua habeat tergiversationem, id est, ystum, non debetur habere gurrhtung [juramentum contrarium], sed juramentum ipsius; et sic de fide et juramento.
- X. Teir meuylwryaith yssid yuechniaith: diwat yuechni, ac emheu emach; ac adef yuechni, ac na allo kemell a diebryt mach guedy rodet. [Tria sunt opprobria fidejussionis: sponsionem negare cum ipse sponsor sit; sponsionem agnoscere et compellere non posse; moratorium se prebere postquam detur.]
- XI. Tribus modis differtur fidejussor et kennogyn [debitor]: audito cornu regis euntis in exercitu; et haul treis [actione rapine]; et ladrat [furti]: fidejussor debet adauael [pignus] ducere cum kennogon [debitore] usque ad tutum, et primam verberationem accipere et ligare; et si sic non faciet, reddat ipse solus.
- XII. Spatium fidejussoris ad preparandum tal [solutionem], septimana et una dies.
- XIII. Spatium fidejussoris, ut sciat an est fidejussor vel non, tres dies.
- XIV. Quicumque fit golvodauc [vas] non deliberabitur usque unum diem et annum.
- XV. Tres sunt lire legales: scilicet, lira regis; lira penkerd [musici primarii]; et lira optimatis: vtraque primarum dimidium libre valet, plectrum vero XII. denarios; tercia LX. denarios, plectrum III. denarios.

XXI. DE PRECIO MEMBRORUM.

i. Hec sunt membra ejusdem precii: scilicet, due manus et duo pedes, duo oculi et nares, labia et aures: precium cujuslibet horum, VI. vacce et VI. uncie argenti.

ii. Si auris hominis abscidatur, et ea tamen audire possit, due vacce et due uncie argenti pro ea reddende sunt.

iii. Precium cujuslibet digiti manus est vacca una et uncia argenti.

iv. Precium pollicis est due vacce et due uncie argenti.

v. Precium genitalium membrorum est VI. vacce et VI. uncie argenti.

vi. Precium est genitalium etiam quantum omnium membrorum.

vii. Lingua valet quantum omnia membra.

viii. Precium omnium membrorum est insimul collectum LXXXVIII. libre.

ix. Sanguis hominis cujuslibet est XXIII. denarii.

x. Precium sanguinis Christi fuit XXX. denarii; sed indignum videtur ut Dei sanguis et hominis ejusdem sit precii, quapropter hominis sanguis minoris est precii.

xi. Dentis precium est XXIII. denarii, sed incisivorum dentium precium ter levatur.

xii. Precium cicatricis que in facie hominis apparet, dimidium libre; si in manu sit talis cicatrix, LX. denarii; si in pede, XXX. denarii.

xiii. Siquis in capite percutiatur ita quod cerebrum appareat; vel in latere vulneratur ita [quod] intestina exeant; vel ita percutiatur ut os femoris vel brachii fractum sit: pro eorum quolibet tres libre reddantur; nam ex quolibet illorum vite iminet periculum.

xiv. Siquis ita percutiatur in capite quod ossa fracta deponantur, et de superiori parte creuan [cranii], III. denarii debent reddi pro quolibet osse in vase cneo sonante; si autem ab inferiori parte creuan [cranii], III. denarii legales reddantur.

xv. Siquis manu aliquem per capillos arripuerit, pro pollice II. denarios, pro unoquoque digitorum unum denarium ei componet.

xvi. Alii dicunt quod si aliquis aliquem traxerit per capillos, et fecerit gualt bonwyn [depilationem], III. denarios legales pro unoquoque digito, de pollice VIII. denarios legales, et pro unoquoque digito denarium legalem [reddet].

xvii. Quidam dicunt, quod, si non sponte feceris cicatricem in facie, non debes reddere nisi precium sanguinis quater; similiter, si in manu, dupliciter; si in pede, semel.

xviii. Si vero sponte, reddatur ei sarhaet cum precio sanguinis ter.

XXII. DE DIGNITATE PENKENEDYL [PREFECTI GENERIS] ET ALIORUM NOBILIUM.

i. Precium uchelvr [optimatis] qui sit penkenedyll [prefectus generis], ter IX. vacce et ter novies XX. vacce cum tribus elevationibus: sarhaet ejus est IX. vacce et totidem untie argenti cum una elevatione.

ii. Precium membri ejus est IX. vacce et novies viginti vacce cum tribus elevationibus.

iii. Precium mayr [prepositi] et kinghellaur [cancellarii] est CLXXX. vacce cum tribus elevationibus pro eorum quolibet: injuria ejus est IX. vacce et IX. uncie argenti.

iv. Mayr [prepositus] nunquam debet fieri penkenedyll [prefectus generis] quamdiu sit mayr.

v. Eligat quisque suum sarhaet vel a suo penkenedyll [prefecto generis] vel a sua dignitate.

vi. Precium nobilis qui dicitur kanhwynaul, id est, qui omnino sit Walensis, LX. tres vacce cum tribus elevationibus: sarhaet ejus est III. vacce et tres uncie argenti.

vii. Si sub optimate sit cum occidatur, optimas debet habere ab interfectore sex vaccas.

viii. Rex vero terciam partem pro kemell [constringente interfectorem ad justitiam] accipiat, et quicquid possit depredari in ultionem usque ad eandem horam in sequenti die.

ix. Precium villani regis est LXIII. vacce cum tribus elevationibus: injuria ejus est tres vacce et III. uncie argenti.

x. Precium exulis regis est III. vacce et ter viginti uncie argenti sine elevatione: injuria ejus est III. vacce sine elevatione.

xi. Precium exulis optimatis est dimidium precii exulis regis: sarhaet ejus est dimidium sarhaet exulis regis.

xii. Precium exulis villani est, et sarhaet, dimidium exulis optimatis.

xiii. Precium captivi de transmarinis partibus est libra et dimidium; si de hac insula est, libra est precium ejus: sarhaet ejus est XII. denarii, sex pro tribus ulnis ad faciendam ei tunicam, et tres pro braccis, et tres pro [per]onibus et cirotecis, id est, dyrnuy] ; pro vologio, id est, gwdyu [falce], 1. denarius ; pro fune, id est, raf, que sit XII. ulnarum, 1. denarius ; pro securi, 1. denarius, si sit silvanus.

XIV. Sarhaet hominis cujus uxor stupratur, vel ei aufertur, elevatur ter.

XV. Si dixerit quis ab aliquo sarhaet invenisse, ille vero negaverit, solus contra solum dictum alterius jurando negabit ; at si sanguis fluxerit, vel cleis [contusio] apparuerit, se tercio jurabit, quia illa quasi pro testibus sunt.

XVI. Tres autem sunt sanguines pro quibus nichil reddi debet : scilicet, dentium ; narium ; et capitis scabiosi : soluti enim sunt illi sanguines.

XVII. Si captivus liberum percusserit, manus dextra ei abscidatur, vel dominus captivi libero injuriam componat.

XVIII. Sarhaet femine captive est XII. denarii.

XIX. Si fuerit gueinicaul [in ministeriis domesticis occupata], nec jus eam ad rau [fodiendum] vel ad molam ire patiat, sarhaet ejus XXIII. denarii.

XX. Teilvr [familiaris] Aberfrau regis : sarhaet ejus est III. vacce et III. uncie : precium ejus est III. uncie et quater viginti vacce.

XXI. Non sit godor [delictum] in juramento alltud [exulis], licet secum homines non jurent : pergat de podo ad podum donec det juramenta quot homines secum jurare deberent.

XXII. Dirwy captivi, si furtum fecerit : de primo, dimidium libre ; de secundo, libra ; de tercio, membrorum dampnatio, sicut de libero.

XXIII. Ubicumque captivus evadens recapiatur, XXIII. denarii in mercede pro eo redduntur.

XXIV. Pro captivo liberato III. denarii liberatori, juxta numerum uniuscujusque kemvt [comoti] quem pertransierit, prestantur ; si in alteram regionem venerit, liberator XXIII. denarios in manu habebit : terciam partem sibi retinebit, et domino terre duas prestabit.

XXIII. DE MULIERIBUS ET VARIIS EARUM EVENTIBUS.

I. Si captivam alicujus quis impregnaverit, domino ejus assignet aliam que loco illius donec pariat famuletur ; postquam pepererit prolem suam, cujuscumque sit sexus, patri suo alendam debet commendare : si autem in partu moriatur, precium ejus secundum leges domino suo restituat qui eam impregnavit, et prolem exhibeat.

II. Quilibet homo preter alltud [exulem] in suo precio et suo sarhaet habet elevationem : vncie autem que cum vaccis dantur pro elevatione consistunt.

III. Quotiens aliquis ancillam absque domini licentia cognoverit, tociens XII. denarios domino habet componere.

IV. Siquis uxorem ducat datam ei a gente sua, et infra septennium eam dimittat, reddat ei suum aguedi, id est, dotem suam, tantum : si vero post septennium dimittat, de omni substantia dimidium debet habere, nisi vir per aliquam potest plus habere : de prole duas partes debet habere, scilicet, majorem et minorem ; mater vero terciam.

V. Si vero insimul fuerint usque ad alterius obitum, omnis eorum substantia in duo equalia dividantur, id est, dimidium viro, et dimidium mulieri.

VI. Si femine maritate aliqua injuria fuerit illata, juxta libertatem viri sui jus suum ei restituatur.

VII. Si maritus ejus occidatur, injuria ejus primo reddatur, et postea precium ; sed de sarhaet ejus uxor habebit jure partem, sed de precio non participat, quia non est de ejus genere.

VIII. Si filia optimatis cum aliquo eat in rapinam proprio consilio, et postea ab illo dimissa sit, reddat ei VI. jumenta cornuta et aures ejusdem longitudinis habentia.

IX. Si filia villani eat in rapinam cum aliquo, [et] postea ab eodem sit repudiata, reddat ei animalia tria supradicte etatis.

X. Sciendum [est] quod uxor optimatis potest dare camisiam suam, et clamidem, et subtales, et peplum, et farinam, et lac, et caseum, et butirum sine licentia mariti sui ; et omnem subpellectilem domus sue accommodare : uxor vero villani nichil potest dare sine licentia villani nisi mitram, nec aliquod accommodare nisi cribrum, tam longe quod vox ejus possit audiri, stans in limine domus sue dum clamet propter illud.

XI. Quamvis puella eat in rapinam sine licentia parentum suorum et domini sui, illi autem possunt eam retrahere licet invitam, sed sic ab eo veniat ut jus suum plene accipiat ac si a parentibus data esset : tunc autem non oportet patrem reddere mercedem ejus, id est, ammoby. Et si quedam femina in llathlut [rapinam] ierit que virum prius habuit, ipsa potest cum viro remanere invitibus ; sed ubicumque mansio ejus sit, ibi et merces ejus querenda est.

xii. Siquis femine vim intulerit, mercedem ejus et dirvy reddat domino; femine vero injuriam suam, id est, sarhaet, et aguedi [dotem], et dilesrwyd [evictionem]: si vir negaverit et femina opposuerit, capiat illa ejus membrum in leva manu, in dextera vero sanctorum reliquias, et sic juret quod eam illo membro violaverit; et sic de jure nichil amittet.

xiii. Tribus de causis habebit femina suum aguedi [suam dotem], licet ipsa virum suum relinquat: id est, si leprosus sit vir; et si fetidum hanelitum habuerit; et si cum ea coire non possit.

xiv. Tria sunt que jure non possunt auferri mulieri, licet per culpam suam dimissa sit a viro suo: id est, cowyll; et argyvreu, id est, animalia que secum a parentibus detulerat; et animalia que ei redduntur yn wynepwerth si vir ejus aliam cognoverit.

xv. Cum datur cowyl puelle, si voluntatem suam de illo non fecerit statim, antequam a viro suo mane surrexerit, illud commune erit inter illos, nec postea habet majus jus de illo quam de alia re communi: femina debet ter wynepwerth a viro suo si aliam cognoverit; et si ulterius hoc patiat, nunquam debet habere wynepwerth.

xvi. Si puella habens etatem detur viro, et si vir dixerit eam se invenisse corruptam, juramento v. hominum sibi in redemptione proximorum se purget; id est, patris et matris, fratris et sororis, et suo proprio.

xvii. Si femina maritata de alio infametur, si tamen incertum sit, vii. mulierum juramento se purget; si secundo eadem infamia pulsetur, si tamen incertum sit, cum juramento xiiii. mulierum se purget; si autem tercia vice cum quadam certitudine hoc affirmetur, l. mulierum juramento se expurget.

xviii. Nemo debet dare feminam antequam habeat fidejussorem de mercede ejus [reddenda] domino.

xix. Siquis duxerit uxorem yn llathlut [in rapinam], et eam ducat ad domum optimatis cujusdam, optimas ille accipiat fidejussorem a viro illo de mercede ejus [reddenda] domino antequam insimul dormiant.

xx. Merces filie penkenedyl [prefecti generis] est libra.

xxi. Merces filie mayr [prepositi] vel kynghellaur [cancellarii] est libra.

xxii. Merces filiarum swydogion pennadur [ministorum principalium] curie est libra.

xxiii. Merces filiarum virorum cujuslibet minorum curialium est dimidium libre.

xxiv. Merces filie villani, xxiiii. denarii.

xxv. Merces cujuslibet advenc femine sive extranee, xxiiii. denarii, si in terra regis a viro ducatur.

xxvi. Princeps poetarum, id est, penkerd, debet habere mercedes filiarum poetarum sibi subditorum, et munera nuptiarum, [id est,] kywarws neithiaur, a mulieribus noviter datis, id est, xxiiii. denarios.

xxvii. Faber curie habebit mercedes filiarum aliorum fabrorum, quasi penkerd, et omnium fabrorum sub se existentium.

xxviii. Merces filie fabri curie est dimidium libre, et est regis.

xxix. Si [quis] mulierem pregnantem facere abortum coegerit, si quod habuit in ventre animatum fuerit, dimidium galanas reddat; si inanimatum, terciam partem reddat.

xxx. Mulier erit secundum viri sui dignitatem ex quo ei data fuerit; si cum viro alio coierit, et hoc notum fuerit, a suo poterit libere repudiari, nec de jure quicquam habebit preter tria que sibi auferri non possunt: adulter quidem viro prefato suum sarhaet reddat.

xxxi. Si viro suo mulier verbum contumeliosum irrogaverit, tres vaccas camlvry ei componet, quia dominus ejus est, vel cum virga quadam cubitum unum habente ter vir illam feriat, sed non super caput: verum si sine causa vir mulierem suam verberaverit, vir habet ei sarhaet juxta suam dignitatem componere.

xxxii. Si lectum viri sui mulier sine causa derelinquat antequam a viro iterum in lecto suscipiatur, iii. vaccas camlvry ei reddet.

xxxiii. Si quis jacuerit cum muliere tribus noctibus, et vadit in lectum coram omnibus cum ea antequam cooperiatur ignis, et non surrexerit donec discooperiatur mane, tria animalia a viro debet habere: et tantum de llathlut [rapina].

xxxiv. Qui uxorem alicujus osculatur, quartam partem injurie ei reddet.

xxxv. Similiter de gouys [contrectata], nisi in ludo qui dicitur guarae rafan [ludus funis]; et in convivio; et quando aliquis de longe venerit.

xxxvi. Qui vero coitum fecerit, totum restituet.

xxxvii. Triplex est pudor puelle: primus est, cum pater suus, ipsa presente, dixerit se viro illam dedisse; secundus, cum viri lectum primo ascenderit; tertius, cum a lecto surgens inter homines primo venerit : pro primo datur amobyr [amobragium] ; pro secundo cowyl [antipherna] ; pro tercio aguedi [dos].

XXXVIII. Si qua mulier absque parentele sue consilio se copulaverit, et ex eo prolem deduxerit, proles illa cum gente materna, nisi eorum gratia, partem hereditatis non capiat.

XXXIX. Si mulierem indigenam cuidam alltut [exuli] parentes sui conjugem dederint, filii ex eis procreati cum gente materna partem capient hereditatis : nullus tamen eorum sedem habebit principalem. Ex tali conjugio guarthec divach [vacce stemmatis defecti] nascuntur hoc modo : si filius predictorum aliquem occiderit, gens materna reddet interfectum ; pater enim alltut [exul] est, nec genus habet super quod precii partem possit dividere. Si de terra regis mater fuerit, tot[a] proles regis erit.

XL. Vir, si negaverit vim inferre mulieri, prius juramentum, id est, llw gueilit, [juramentum voluntarium] det ; postea si mulier contradixerit, tunc vir juret cum tribus de cognatis proximioribus quod illud est falsum : sic dicitur secundum Norwallenses, sed secundum Sudwallenses juramentum l. virorum.

XLI. Siquis acceperit puellam in uxorem, et invenerit eam corruptam, et secundo eam cognoverit, et cum ea usque mane jacuerit, nichil de jure puelle potest ei auferre : si vero postquam hoc noverit ad nuptiales viros surrexerit, et eis testatus fuerit, et sic probet in crastino, nichil ei debet reddere de jure suo : tunc etas puelle consideretur ; si matura sit in pilis et in uberibus, et si venerint ei muliebria, id est, teithi, septem de proximis ejus et parentibus eam purgent : quod si immatura fuerit, et pro certo fuerit corrupta, incidatur ejus camisia ante et retro, et bustach [bubulus] unius anni uncta cauda tradatur ei ; et si in manu ejus permanserit tradatur ei pro dote, aliter non.

XLII. Si filia alicujus, vel neptis, vel alia quam pater debuerat custodire non custoditur, [ita] quod mulier ante stuprata fuerit, reddat et qui rapuit et qui custodire debuit.

XLIII. Siquis femine soli ambulanti vim intulerit, et negaverit, l. hominum juramenta prestabit, quorum tres eorum [erunt] continentes et abstinentes, id est, a muliere, a carne, et equitatione ; si autem hoc confessus fuerit, femine reddat jus suum plenarie, id est, ydiweirdep, et quietam clamabit : regi vero debet virgam argenteam altam usque ad os suum, ita grossam sicut medium digitum ejus, et sciphum aureum super virgam in quo possit contineri plenus potus regis, ita spissum ut unguem aratoris qui per septennium aratrum tenuerit, vel adeo spissum ut testam ovi auce, vel virilia membra amittat.

XLIV. Si due femine sole ambulaverint, et vim ab aliquo vel ab aliquibus passe fuerint, nichil de jure habebunt : si vero socium secum ambulantem, licet parvulus puer sit, dum tamen ambulare possit et non in dorso feratur, jus suum plenarie habebunt.

XLV. Siquis uxorem repudiaverit sine lege et aliam duxerit, debet judicio mulier iterum venire ad domum suam, et ibi esse usque ad nonum diem ; et illa die, si dimissa fuerit, omnia que illius sunt primo debent de domo exire ; et postea, si vir ejus duxerit aliam uxorem, sit libera, id est, dilys, secundum legem ; quia nullus vir debet habere duas uxores.

XLVI. Siquis uxorem suam dimiserit, et postea penituerit, et illa alteri viro data fuerit, si vir prior potest [eam] attingere unum cum altero viro in lecto habentem et alterum pedem extra, prior de jure debet eam habere.

XLVII. Tribus de causis fit juramentum super virum et mulierem : siquis viderit eam de luco venientem ex una parte, illum vero ex altera parte venientem in eadem hora diei ; vel siquis viderit illos insimul jacentes sub uno eodemque pallio ; vel siquis viderit illum inter femora ejus.

XLVIII. Siquis suam mulierem propter aliquam causam de suo lecto cogat, mulier de familia domus duos testes debet accipere ; et si de domo a viro coacta fuerit, iterum mulier de villa accipiat duos testes ; et sic mulier a viro suo habebit wynebwert plenarie quando redierit.

XLIX. Quando vir et mulier divortium fecerint, sic debet inter eos dividi : primo vir habebit sues, mulier oves ; postea mulier dividat, et vir eligat ; et primo suppellex [dividetur] : viri sunt omnia que subtus sunt, mulieris que supra ; sed postquam vir aliam duxerit, vir debet mittere vestimenta lecti mulieri quam repudiavit : omnia vasa lactis preter unum bayol [multrale] mulieris erunt ; omnes discos preter unum vir habebit : plastrum vero et jugum mulier habebit. Omnia vasa potus et dolia viri sunt. Vir habebit caldarium, brekan [tegetem], pulvinar, cultrum, securim lignorum, terebellum, terebrum, et retentaculum, falces omnes preter unam, et cratem; mulier habebit patellam et tripodem, dolabrum, cribrum, vomerem, et unam falcem, et linum et lini semen, lanam et globos filorum: argentum, et aurum, et tele dividantur: vir habebit horreum, annonam, et quicquid super terram et in terra continetur, et gallinas, et unum catum, si plures fuerint, omnes mulieris erunt. Mulier debet habere omnes carnes salsatas super terram, id est, yn heli, et caseum recentem yn heli: postquam elevantur carnes et casei, nichil de illis mulier consequetur. Vas butiri, si non sit plenum, mulier habebit, et pernam si non sit integra, et caseum si integer non fuerit, et tantum de farina quantum ipsa poterit inter manus suas ferre de cella cum genuum fortitudine. Unusquisque habeat vestimenta sibi congrua, preter pallia, et illa dividantur. Et nota quod si capre fuerint et oves defuerint, mulieris pro ovibus erunt capre; si sues, et oves, et capre fuerint, dividantur capre equaliter inter illos. Si vero [vir] habuit aliquod breint [privilegium], prius accipiat, postea sicut diximus dividatur; et omnia debita que simul consumpserunt equaliter reddant.

I. Tres sunt femine que hereditatem matrum possunt habere: prima est illa que in pignore sit pro terra, et filium habeat dum sit pignus; ille filius debet habere hereditatem matris sue: secunda est illa que data sit a genere homini hereditatem non habenti; filius talis debet habere hereditatem sue matris: tertia est illa cujus filius amittet hereditatem suam, scilicet, ex parte patris, pro ultione cognati sue matris.

XXIV. INCIPIT DE TERMINIS TERRARUM.

HIC DICITUR QUOMODO CURIA ET QUOMODO DEBEAT TERMINARE ECCLESIA.

I. Curia terminabit terminos suos ante omnes in omnibus locis; post curiam ecclesia terminabit terminos suos; postea breint [libertas]; deinde kynwarchadv [prima occupatio]. Verum cum curia terminaverit, mayr [prepositus] et kighellaur [cancellarius] debent pro eis, si noverint, terminos assignare, et jurando confirmare.

II. Cum ville contenderint de terminis suis quarum neutra excedit aliam dignitate, tunc optimates terre terminos demonstrare habent, et eos juramento affirmare si sciant; si non, dividant illud dubium de quo fit contentio in duo equalia inter villas illas.

III. Dignitas vero major terminabit super minorem.

IV. Cum villa super villam terminet, plenam randir [particulam] cum termino auferri non debet.

V. In randir [particula] continentur ccc. et xii. acre: ut in ccc. acris, araturam, et pascua, et focalia possessor habeat; inde xii. domicilia.

VI. Pedes xv. et dimidium faciunt longum jugum.

VII. Juga xvi. faciunt longitudinem acre: duo juga latitudinem.

VIII. Septem randir [particule] faciunt maynaur [manoriam].

IX. Rex debet habere dimidium libre de qualibet determinatione que fit inter duas villas; iudices vero xxiii. [denarios].

X. Si terra adjudicata fuerit alicui per iudicium, de qualibet particula terre, id est, randir, rex debet habere dimidium libre.

XI. Si villa adjudicetur alicui de qua sit swid [officium], rex habebit ab eo libram et dimidium.

XII. Si dadanhud [actio possessoria] adjudicetur alicui de terra quam pater suus ante eum coluerit; usque ad finem illius anni, donec dorsum ejus vertatur ad acervum, non tenetur alicui respondere.

XIII. Placitum terre, et metam inter regem et ecclesiam, baculus et evangelium debent facere: si in eadem dignitate fuerint, antiquior metam faciat.

XIV. Curia vero regis debet metam facere inter equales dignitates, ubicumque obviaverit.

XV. Duo dies sunt, scilicet, nonus dies kalendarum Novembrium, et nonus dies kalendarum Maii, in quibus de petitione hereditatis questio movenda est; et quamvis extra hos dies hujusmodi questio oriatur, non tenetur.

XVI. Siquis autem altero dierum prefatorum questionem moverit pretaxatam usque ad alterum diem paratum erit ei iudicium suscipere; sed si hoc medio tempore iudicium minime habuerit, altero die oportebit questionem quasi primo denuo suscitare: alioquin usque ad alterum diem iudicium erit ei obstrusum.

XVII. Quicumque hiis diebus questionem de aliqua terra fecerit, tertia die debet habere responsum et nona die iudicium; sed si usque ad Februarium vel Augustum prolongabitur iudicium de termino ad terminum, non debet postea jure habere ante predictos dies iudicium.

xviii. Ad terram autem terminandam nonus dies mensium non est expectandus, sed cum regi et optimatibus placuerit terminatio facienda est.

xix. Mayr [prepositus] et kyghellaur [cancellarius] debent custodire desertum regis donec rex faciat de eo suam voluntatem.

xx. Si contingat quod ecclesia in rusticana villa edificatur, sumpta a rege licentia, et in eadem missa celebretur, et corpora ibi sepeliantur, exinde villa illa prius rusticana fiet libera.

xxi. Si villanus regis filium optimatis ex licentia regis alendum susceperit, filius ille particeps erit hereditatis cum filiis villani post mortem ejus.

xxii. Cum fratres inter se hereditatem dividant, tydyn, id est, edificia, patris, et octo acre terre cedent juniori cum caldario, securi, et cultro sui patris: hec tria non potest pater nisi juniori dare; et si in vadimonia sunt data, possunt redimi, nunquam amitti.

xxiii. Quilibet frater debet [habere] tydyn [edificia] et viii. acras.

xxiv. Junior debet dividere hereditatem inter fratres; senior autem primo eligere debet, postea secundum etatem suam unusquisque ad minorem.

xxv. Tribus vicibus debet terra dividi: primo inter fratres; secundo inter consobrinos; tercio inter filios consobrinorum: ultra non erit terre divisio.

xxvi. Si trina quis vice citatus de petitione hereditatis non compareat, nisi honesta causa et legali sit detentus, terra adjudicabitur jure calumpniatori: si tamen justa causa non occurrat, restitutione gaudebit: si, prima contempta, ad secundam venerit citationem, vel ad terciam, [vel] questiones contempserit, [et] tociens regi tres vacas camlwry componet: a causa tamen non cadet.

xxvii. Siquis reddiderit kynasset [honorarium] de terra sua in obitu suo non reddet ebediw.

xxviii. Siquis de jure parentele, id est, ach, terram petierit, non audietur, nisi seniores patrie parentelam [illam sciant] et jurando affirmant.

xxix. Siquis terram de jure indebitam peteir oes guyr [per quatuor generationes] tenuerit, in eadem patria cum eis quibus jure hereditario terra debetur manens absque litis contestatione, domus combustione, aratri fractione, [quia] quiete tenuerit, de cetero non tenetur alicui respondere; lex enim inter eos clausa est.

xxx. De terra regi debita minori spacio quam c. annis lex non concluditur.

xxxi. Siquis patrimonium suum, ipso presente et non contradicente, alii dare patiat, deinceps, licet illud petat, non audietur.

xxxii. Siquis, diu in alltudet [exilio] commoratus, tandem revertens petat partem hereditatis, cognatis suis hoc sibi prestantibus dimidium libre, quasi premium servande hereditatis, debet dare.

xxxiii. Sicuti terram, non contradicente jure, rex dederit, filius regis terram illam illi auferre non poterit.

xxxiv. Siquis homo episcopi, vel abbatis, in terra regis cum homine ipsius certaverit, eorum dirwy regis erit: similiter, si homo episcopi cum homine abbatis fiet.

xxxv. Siquis terram alicujus ex parte regis interdictam violenter araverit, domino terre iiii. denarios legales apertionis, et iiii. denarios legales aratri depositionis, et de qualibet gleba subversa i. denarium habet dare: rex vero omnes boves, cum aratro, et vomere, et cultro, et amaeth [aratoris] dextri pedis, et agentis, id est, geilwat, dextre manus precium habebit.

xxxvi. Siquis terram alicujus, aliquid in ea recondens, suffoderit, illud absconditum, nisi fuerit thesaurus, terre possessoris erit; omnis enim thesaurus regis est.

xxxvii. Siquis foderit annel [laqueum] in terra aliena, iiii. denarios legales domino terre [reddat], quia eo inconsulto terram ejus aperuit, et animal quod in eo repperitur; regi vero tres vacas camlwry.

xxxviii. Siquis rete miserit in aquam non suam absque licentia, tercia pars capture reti et due domino aque cedentur, et regi camlwry.

xxxix. Siquis in terra alterius, et non sua, absque licentia odynd [trituratorium] paraverit, dominus terre odynd [trituratorium] habebit; rex vero tres vacas camlwry.

xl. Nemo debet [habere] penkeueisted [principalem sedem] vel svyd [dignitatem] ex parte matris, si sit qui ex parte patris habere debeat, licet de terra pars ei aliqua concedatur: dignius est, tamen, ut aliquis ex parte matris eam habeat quam alienus.

xli. Siquis metam inter villas notabilem fregerit, iiii. vacas camlwry regi, et iiii. denarios possessori componet; metam vero sicut ante fuit construat.

xlii. Si duorum inter terras flumen meta fuerit, et super flumen arbor ceciderit, illi vero contendant cujus illorum arbor sit, vel [qui] ad illam magleu [septionem] ventionis inter [eos] habeat firmare; illius arbor erit, et ad illam magleu [septionem] firmare, in cuius terra creverit.

XLIII. Qui publicam viam, vel fossam termini, araverit, dimidium libre dabit.

XLIV. Precium lapidis mete, id est, croysuayn, vel alius, nominatur dimidium libre.

XLV. Primo calumpniatores debent ostendere eorum calumpniam; deinde defensores eorum defensiones ostendant; et secundum hoc debent majores natu [pagi], id est, hen-euydyon cantref, considerare diligenter simul qui eorum verum confirmant et qui non; et postquam majores natu recitaverint sententiam, tunc debent soli iudices exire separatim, et judicare secundum hoc quod recitaverint majores natu; et quod judicaverint iudices debet rex extendere: sic terminatur placitum mete in terra regis.

XXV. SIC DECLARATUR PLACITUM TERRE.

I. Si dadanhud [actio possessoria] alicui judicetur, et cum karro ad terram venerit, ix. diebus ac noctibus ibi erit quietus; et in nono die responsum dabit, et in secundo nono iudicium dabit.

II. Si dadanhud [actio possessoria] cum onere dorsi ad terram venerit quam suus pater ante araverit, tribus diebus manebit ibi quietus; et in tercio dabit responsum, et in nono iudicium.

III. Si pater alicujus habuit domum, et horreum, et siccarium, cum aratione, in aliqua terra; vel si aliquis alius habuit supradicta, et dadanhud [actionem possessoriam] postulaverit secundum legem, dadanhud [possessionem] debet habere de omnibus que patris sui fuerint, donec messuerit, et dorsum vertat ar das [ad cumulum annone]; et postea in nono die kalendarum Novembrium dabit iudicium.

IV. Quicumque dadanhud [actio possessoria] judicetur jure, nullus illum expellere poterit nisi proprie hereditarius, quia secundus dadanhud [hereditarius] non expellit primum dadanhud [hereditarium], id est, improprium; et unus improprius non expellit alium proprium: et si duo hereditarii contenderint, nullus poterit expellere alium.

V. Quicumque vero terram in galanas reddiderit, ipse nichilo minus in omni tempore redditum terre domino suo restituet: tertia pars in ejus sarhaet constat.

VI. Siquis super publicam viam regis arborem fregerit, primo regi reddat camlwry, postea precium ejus, id est, dimidium libre: redditis istis, viam prosperet sicut prius fuit; et quamdiu vixerit homo ille, rege veniente ad viam illam, ab illo homine bon [stolo] illius arboris panno unius coloris debet cooperiri.

VII. Siquis firmaverit pactum coarationis, id est, keueredri, cum aliquo, et postea sponte fregerit, ille debet reddere regi tria animalia transgressionis, quod dicitur camlvry; et ad predictum pactum servandum inviolabiliter redire; et quicquid coarator suus de aratione sua perdidit in illo spacio implere.

VIII. Hec autem forma in arando debet servari: prima acra vomeri, secunda cultro, tertia aratori, postea tribus melioribus bobus, de meliore ad meliorem, postea geilwat [agenti], postea v. bobus, de meliore ad meliorem, postea carthvr [fossori]: partem ligni sui debet arator habere, id est, keueir asclaud, id est, unam acram, per totum annum, quia ipse debet perficere aratrum a primo ligno usque ad ultimum.

IX. Branar [novale] per tres annos aratur.

X. Brandeil [novale], ubi jacuerint animalia, similiter tir gwyd [terra graminea] si buarthteil [sterquilinio fecundata] fuerit, per v. annos aratur.

XI. Buarthteil [terra sterquilinio colenda] sine gwyd [cespite] per tres annos aratur.

XII. Kardeil [terra fimo carro vecto colenda] per IIII. annos aratur.

XIII. Terra silvana eradicata per v. annos aratur.

XIV. Siquis calumpniaverit terram, veniat cum omni parentela sua; si hoc non fecerit, responsum ei non datur: si vero venerint et amiserint, non loquantur ultra in tempore illius domini; et si forte in exilio aliquis eorum fuerit tunc temporis, et ille repatriaverit, nisi in primo anno terram suam calumpniaverit cum eam arari viderit, ei ultra non respondebitur.

XV. Siquis ultra tres noctes in possessione alterius sine licentia moratus fuerit, amittat totum quod habet.

XVI. Mensura acre legalis, id est, erv, [est] virga ejusdem longitudinis ut maximi viri qui in villa fuerit, cum longitudine brachii ejus: LX. longitudinis illius virge erunt in longitudine legalis acre, id est, erv; latitudo acre est una longitudo talis virge ex utraque parte geilwat [agentis], cum longitudine brachii ejus, illo tenente medium medii jugi in aratro.

XVII. Octo ex talibus acris erunt in fundamento optimatis, et IIII. in fundamento villani.

xviii. Si terram hereditatis sue parentela aliqua, id est, guelygord, inter se non dividerit, quamvis omnibus aliis defunctis non nisi unus illius supersit, ipse terram habebit; at si de terra illa utpote deficiens jura sua regi prestare non poterit, rex terram possidebit donec ille sufficienter pro terra regi possit respondere.

xix. Et nota, quod tripliciter dicitur dadanhud [actio possessoria]: scilicet, dadanhud beych [cum onere dorsi]; dadanhud kayr [cum carro]; dadanhud heredic [cum aratione]: primum de calumpnia terre tribus diebus et tribus noctibus non tenetur respondere; secundum, quinque diebus et v. noctibus; tertium, per annum.

xx. Tres filii ex uno patre et matre inter quos hereditas non debet partiri: primus est ille qui nascitur ante legem, id est, donationem generis; et si iterum data sit mater ejus eidem viro a genere, et postea de illo filium habeat; ille filius jure non debet suam hereditatem partiri cum suo fratre qui natus fuit ante donationem matris sue a genere: secundus est, si clericus haberet feminam datam a suo genere, et sic habet filium ex ea, et postea ille clericus presbiteratum ordinem acciperet; si post votum consecrationis filium haberet de eadem femina, prior filius non debet partiri cum filio postnato: tertius est, habens fratrem mutum, quia mutus non potest respondere; et nemo debet habere terram nisi respondeat pro ea: quia patria non datur muto.

xxi. Tria sunt acta, id est, teyr kyvlavan, pro quibus unusquisque suam amittit patriam: scilicet, [propter] regis prodicionem; penkenedyl [prefecti generis] mactationem; et kynllvyn [insidias]: si quilibet istorum comprehendi poterit, vita condempnabitur, gravius et turpius quam latro vel homicida simplex; si non comprehenditur, et velit pacificari cum domino et cum parentibus, duplex erit redditio quam domino quam parentibus; amittet tamen hereditatem: si tamen limina Apostolorum Petri et Pauli petierit, et domini apostolici rescriptum retulerit, in quo contineatur illum condigne pro commisso satisfaciendo penitentiam suscepisse, hereditatem recuperabit. Quartum est, si quis cesserit uni hereditario, quia non onera et servitia hereditati imposita sustineret.

xxii. Tria edificia sunt fratribus communia: videlicet, ecclesia; piscaria; molendinum.

xxiii. Si vero in terra sancte ecclesie homo regis vel episcopi conflictum fecerit, et sanguis manaverit, uterque dominorum suorum habebit dirui sui hominis.

Finit de terminis terrarum.

Si contigerit aliquem carnem animalis a se furati comedendo sedere, sive non comedendo habere, et [quod] alius atque alius, forte usque ad centum veniens, carnem a fure sibi oblatam acceperit, et comederit, quisque pro se [erit] velud consentiens et furti particeps, quoniam de furto moto tenetur respondere : et hoc appellatur kyhyryn kan astyr [frustum carnis centum eventorum].

XXXVIII. DE MENBRIS REGALIBUS.

i. Membra regis sunt illi qui ejusdem juris sunt cum eo ad habendum regnum ex parte patris, licet tamen eo careant.

ii. Unum [est] tamen eorum cujus jus majus est et lex : scilicet, ille qui inter discumbentes collocatur in loco aliquo, regnum expectans ; et ille vocatur edling [heres].

iii. Injuria illius equiperatur duabus partibus injurie regis.

iv. Precium ejus quoque equiperatur duabus partibus precii regis, sed sine auro et argento.

v. Reliqui vero qui membra regis sunt debent habere injuriam suam et precium suum equiperatum tercię parti injurie et precii regis, sine auro et argento, quousque ipsi terram a rege susceperint.

vi. Postea erit jus eorum et dignitas juxta jus et dignitatem terre quam susceperint, nec ultra erit jus eorum et dignitas secundum regalem dignitatem, quia amplius non sunt ejus membra, sed proprii juris sunt.

XXXIX. DE DIGNITATE PENKENEDYL [CAPITIS GENERIS].

i. Ille qui est capud generis sui, id est, penkenedyl, debet reddere in anno domino suo xx. solidos.

ii. Quilibet homo liber id quod debet domino suo inter kalendas Novembris et festum Sancti Martini reddere debet.

iii. Quecumque officialis dignitas, id est, swyd, fuerit in potestate illius qui est capud generis, sui illius erit ; et si ipse aliquam dignitatem filio suo vel consanguineo suo dederit, ille domino suo xx. solidos reddet, vel qui eam susceperit.

iv. Quilibet homo quem liberaverit regi debet x. solidos, nisi fuerit aliqua dignitate sublimatus.

v. Qui reddet xx. solidos domino suo in anno, tantundem reddet in mercede filie sue, et tantundem in susceptione terre sue a rege, et tantundem in testamento suo, id est, abediw : [qui] x. solidos domino suo reddet in anno, tantundem reddet in quolibet trium supradictorum : unaqueque acra terre redditiva, id est, kellidus, tantum reddet domino suo quantum alia.

XI. DE PORTHIAINT [CENA] ET MENSURA MAYNAUR [MANORIE].

i. Septem particule terre faciunt maynaur [manoriam].

ii. De quadam particula terre redduntur inter kalendas Novembris et kalendas Maii lx. panes : in latitudine cujuslibet due palme erunt, id est, due rechwant, a summitate pollicis usque ad summitatem medii digiti manus ; spissitudo debet esse duorum digitorum ; et ix. panes de avena vel rynnnyon [de farina avenacea crassiori] ; et sex eorum apponantur regi, et tres regine.

iii. Companagium lx. panum debet esse porcus, trium digitorum lardi in scapulis, et in clunibus, et in costis ; et hujusmodi porcus dicitur buch triguan [sus trium annorum].

iv. Si decet porcus, loco ejus detur vas butiri, trium pugnorum in latitudine et trium in longitudine, absque summitate, id est, moyl.

v. Cum ix. panibus debet dari butirum ad modum mole formatum, trium pugnorum in latitudine et unius in spissitudine ; cupa quoque cervisie, trium pugnorum in latitudine, et trium in longitudine.

vi. In prebenda equorum lx. garbe, ita grosse ut plene sint due manus viriles tenendo circa ligamen ; et in estate donum ciborum ; et in nummis redduntur xviii. [denarii] ; et nummus ministris qui hec colligunt.

vii. De carne, animal occisum et excoriatum, et edion kie [caro bovis] ; et donum ciborum in auctumno tantundem ; et tunc non erit ran [portio], nec doureth [domicinium].

viii. Venatores tamen habebunt kylch [progressum] in Octobri, id est, Hyduref, et kylch [progressum] in vere, dum cervas venantur.

ix. Et si rex extra terram propriam proficiscitur, regina debet habere kylch [progressum], cum pueris et puellis.

x. Ex quo accipitrarii accipitres querere inceperint, super villanos regis kylch [progressum] habebunt.

xi. Ovis enim avicularis datur de unoquoque transposito, vel duo denarii legales.

xii. Kylch [progressus] datur iu yeme et equis domini et ministrorum, et equis regine, exceptis equis familie.

xiii. Kylch [progressus] datur ministrilibus joculatoribus, id est, kylch kerdorion, de aliena terra, dum expectant donaria sua.

xiv. Villani regis edificabunt omnia edificia regis.

xv. Villani respondebunt pro filiis suis usque ad xiiii. annos, et postea regi filios suos denotabunt; et ipsi pro se erunt legibus regis addicti.

xvi. In nulla liberali arte erudire possunt filios suos sine licentia.

xvii. Merces filiarum suarum, ii. solidi.

xviii. In obitu xc. denarios; et tantundem reddent cum patrimonium suum acceperint.

xix. Quilibet equus in prebenda habebit iii. garbas.

xx. Equus pensvydauc [ministri supremi], et equus iudicis et sacerdotis familie, unusquisque eorum habebit partem duorum equorum, in curia et extra curiam.

xxi. Prepositus debet servare desertum regis; ipse enim habebit mel, et pisces, et parva silvestria, id est, man wyduilet, donec homines ad inhabitandum venerint: postea terra illa erit sub regis legibus.

XXI. DE REPROBATIONE TESTIUM.

i. Siquis testes reprobaverit antequam jurent, eo ipso contra eum admittentur.

ii. Reprobatur autem testis hiis de causis: scilicet, pro fide violata; et si in re sua propria fuerit testis; et de abusione uxoris; et de ladrad kyuaedu [furto denotato]; et cognati occisione; et [si] de hiis conquerendo ante yn llys ac yn llan [in curia et in ecclesia], nec justiciam habuit.

XXII. DE VII. SEDIBUS EPISCOPALIBUS DYUET [DIMETIE].

i. Septem episcopales domus sunt in Dyuet [Dimetia]:

ii. Menevia, que est sedes principalis in Cambria.

iii. Ecclesia Ismaelis.

iv. Ecclesia Decemman [hodie Rhos Crowther].

v. Ecclesia Ussult.

vi. Ecclesia Teilau [Llan Deilo].

vii. Ecclesia Teuledauc [Llan Deulydog].

viii. Ecclesia Keneu [Llan Genau].

ix. Abbates Teylau, et Teuledauc, et Ismaelis, et Decemman tenentur [esse] clerici siue ordinati: ebediw cujuslibet eorum domino Dyuet [Dimetie] erunt xii. libre, vel qui illis successerint reddant.

x. Menevia, quia prima, ab omni debito manet soluta.

xi. Ecclesia Keneu et ecclesia Ussilt, quia terris carent, ab illo debito libere sunt.

xii. Qui sanguinolentam fecerit unam abbatum sedium predictarum, vi. libras reddet ei, et lotricem de genere suo in obprobrium generis sui, et in memoriam redditionis.

XXIII. [DE FLAGIS.]

i. Dyrnaut a gaffer o anuod nyt sarhaet yaun hono diuuat hagen am argywet [ictus vero non sponte percussus nec injuria est; sed oportet infortunium compensare]: scilicet, guaet a gueli a chreith gogyuarc or byt [pro sanguine; et plaga; et cicatrice, si conspicua sit].

ii. Triplum sanguinis in galanas: dimidium in sarhaet.

iii. Sanguis autem effusus usque ad cutem, vel oram clamidis, vel usque ad talum, si veniunt, reddendus est.

iv. Tercia pars cujuslibet in ejus sanguine constat.

v. Qui plagam fecerit in facie hominis, reddat ei precium sanguinis quater, et quolibet anno dum vixerit pallium, cum quo descenderit, ut possit cooperire cicatricem faciei sue.

XLIV. QUO NUTRIATUR FILIUS.

i. Filius qui clam acquiritur, quomodo nutrirī debeat: mater illius filii primo ix. mensibus illum in utero gestat; postea tribus mensibus nutrire debet: que reputantur ei pro anno.

ii. Postea pater ejus debet providere ei omnia necessaria: primo debet dare ei ovem fetam cum vellere cum agno, que dicitur dauat kyfhewin [ovis plena]; deinde gueren [omentum], vel nummum; deinde patellam ferream, vel quatuor denarios legales; deinde manuoctria frumenti ad faciendum pulmentum ei; plastrum duorum boum de lignis; duas ulnas de panno albo ad cooperiendum eum, vel iii. denarios legales; deinde nutrici ejus duas ulnas de panno radiato, vel xii. denarios; deinde vaccam fetam cum vitulo; deinde tria plaustra, scilicet, de frumento, ordeo, avena; deinde tria plaustra de lignis: hec omnia matri debentur, si illa voluerit; si autem noluerit, alii dentur.

iii. Vir prius debet nutrire infantem usque ad annum, mulier usque dimidium anni; et sic alternatim usque ad xiiii. annos.

iv. Tunc pater debet ducere eum ante dominum suum, et postea erit filius sub domino suo.

v. Siquis filium non dixerit esse suum, mater cum tribus mulieribus, ejusdem nobilitatis et dignitatis cum ea, juramento affirmant, quod ipse, et non alius, filium illum in se genuerit; et postea jus est ut illum recipiat: simili modo de filia.

vi. Triplici autem modo negatur quis de genere de quo se dicit esse: primo, pater solus negabit hoc modo; ponens manum sinistram super caput illius qui negatur, et dexteram super altare dedicatum metropolis ecclesie et reliquias, jurabit se illum in ventre matris sue non genuisse; secundo, si pater non extet, penkenedyl [caput generis] cum vii. viris sibi proximioribus modo supradicto negabit; tercio, si pater et penkenedyl [caput generis] non supersunt, l. viri proximiores illi qui pater dicitur modo predicto jurabunt, et negabunt: eodem modo faciet mater ut filium assumant.

Tres loci legales sunt cuilibet lancee in consistorio: primus est, cum cauda ejus cum una manu terre infigitur, ut inde vix duabus manibus extrahatur; secundus est, ponere super lucum capite hominis altiore; tercius est, ejus capud in cumulo terre, id est, twyn, abscondere: et si cum lancea in consistorio in uno istorum trium locorum non posita aliquis fuerit occisus, possessor lancee terciam partem sui galanas reddet; alias immunis erit.

xxvii. Tria sunt secreta colloquia que rex debet habere sine iudice: cum sacerdote; cum muliere; cum medico.

xxviii. Tria sunt animalia que dicuntur untrouidiauc [unipedes]: scilicet, equus; accipiter; gellki [molosus]: si quis fregerit pedem unius istorum, precium totum solvet.

xxix. Quatuor sunt homines qui in nullo loco refugium habent: primus est, qui post silentium ascecle in tribus festis principalibus pacem regis fregit; secundus est, pignus; tercius, excommunicatus; quartus, captivus.

xxx. De fidejussione sic dicendum est: fidejussor non negans fidejussionem post mortem sui debitoris et [ejus] debitum reddere [debet si alter] non fecisset.

xxxi. Nullus debet vita privari propter vim quam fecerit, sed satisfaciat pro ipsa secundum dignitatem hominis et quantitatem rei, et dirwi regi.

xxxii. Quicumque conduxerit equum, id est, llogi, quamvis mortuus fuerit, non debet illum restituere, sed juret quod non fecit equo illius deterius quam equo suo, et lloc [mercedem] persolvat; et postea liber sit.

xxxiii. Siquis claudicat equum alterius, det alterum equum possessori equi, ad faciendum quod faceret de suo equo, donec equus sanetur: et si sanus non fuerit equus, recipiat sanum pro claudicante.

xxxiv. Quicumque accenderit ignem in domo non sua, usque ad terciam noctem tenetur respondere pro opere ignis.

xxxv. Quicumque portat ignem de domo aliqua sine licentia possessoris ignis, reddat pro opere ignis, et regi kamlvry.

xxxvi. Nullus debet dare ignem donec sciat quid de igne operatur; et si dederit, pro tercia parte operis ignis respondeat.

xxxvii. Nullus homo occidendus est pro galanas secundum legem, nisi ipse sit llofrud [homicida], quia, si gens ipsius preberet eum hostibus suis, super gentem galanas constitui non deberet: ideoque, licet aliquis alius, excepto llofrud [homicida], partem que super eum cadit non reddat, non debet occidi, sed dominus debet eum compellere ad reddendum, quia terciam partem habebit dominus pro kemell [compulsione]: si autem alius occidatur, galanas reddatur pro ipso.

xxxviii. Si autem llofrud [homicida] non valet partem suam de galanas reddere, et propter hoc patriam suam relinquat, gens non debet respondere hostibus pro parte ipsius llofrud [homicida], nec parentes ipsius, si llofrud [homicida] sit vivus.

xxxix. Si autem ille llofrud [homicida] reddat partem suam, et gens non reddat partem que super se cadit, ipse llofrud [homicida] non tenetur respondere pro parte que cecidit super gentem, nec debet occidi si ipse partem suam reddidit, licet gens partem suam non reddat.

xl. Quicumque absciderit raun [pilos caude] equi, ponat equum in loco invisio donec crescat totum, et alium equum det possessori equi donec omnino crescat; et post quilibet suum equum recipiat.

xli. Si quis abortum eque fecerit, reddat iiii. denarios legales.

xl.ii. Stalvyn [admissarius] equitii valet tres equas: scilicet, duas pro testiculis, et unam pro corpore.

xl.iii. Precium mung [jube] equi, tantum quantum capistrum, scilicet, denarius legalis.

xl.iiii. Precium talkudin [antiarum] equi, tantum quantum capistrum, scilicet, unus denarius legalis.

xl.v. Precium mung [jube] eque vel kebestor [capistri], i. denarius legalis.

xl.vi. Teithy [qualitates] eque sunt portare kar [carrum] contra rupem, ac yguaiet [et in declivum]; et portare onus ad tergum; et quod eboliauc [apta sit parere]: si ita non sit, tercia pars precii retro reddatur.

xl.vii. Baed [verres] valet tres sues: duas pro testiculis, et unam pro corpore.

XLVIII. Similiter maharaen [aries] tantum valet.

XLIX. Quodlibet anaf [damnum] super equum, aut fractio coloren [caude], aut fractio auris, vel eruitio oculi, est tertia pars precii equi.

L. Quicumque domino suo homicidium comminatus fuerit, sicut proditor reus mortis erit.

LI. Homo truidedauc [permissus] in domo alterius non debet habere teil [sterquilium], nec epil [progeniem], neque cludeir [messe], neque domos edificatas, nisi fuerit amot [pactum] inter eos.

LII. Omnis amot [omne pactum] redditur si non negatur, licet sit anreith [vastatio] pro eo.

LIII. Postquam finiatur satisfactio de galanas, postea non erit llys [rejectio] inter gentes, quia odium inter gentes est deletum.

LIV. Tres sunt qui dicuntur tri tremyc argluyd [tres contemptus domini], et pro quolibet redduntur nouies viginti denarii: videlicet, crucem suam frangere; placitum contra jus relinquere; et nuntium suum verberare.

LV. Iniuria hominis de vulnere in pede dextro sexta pars est totius precii cum una elevatione; in manu dextra, cum duabus elevationibus; in facie, cum tribus elevationibus.

LVI. Si quis habuerit plures filios, et aliquis eorum vel omnes preter unum mortui fuerint, ille unus hereditatem omnem habebit, si potuerit pro hereditate sua domino respondere.

LVII. Si aliqua progenies inter se diuiderit hereditatem, et post aliqui eorum defecerint, pars eorum in manu regis cadet, quia alii partem suam secundum divisionis rationem habuerunt; et notandum, quod nullus improprius potest expellere alium improprium; sicut nec proprius potest expellere alium proprium, neque dadanhud [possessor] expellere aliud dadanhud [alium possessorem].

GLOSSARY

WELSH AND OTHER TERMS WHICH OCCUR IN THE ENGLISH VERSION

OF

THE VENEDOTIAN, DIMETIAN, AND GWENTIAN CODES,

AND IN THE WELSH LAWS.

A.

ABERFRAW (aber-Fraw) efflux of the Fraw:—The princely seat of Venedotia was situated where the brook Fraw flows into the sea.

ABO:—A carcase of an animal killed by a wolf or other beast of prey.

ACHWRE (ach-gwre) near belt:—An enclosure of wattles or thorns surrounding a building at such a distance as to prevent cattle reaching and damaging the thatch.

ADLAMWR (ad-lam-gwr) one returning:—A proprietor who for some cause entered the service of another proprietor without agreement; if he left him after the expiration of a year and a day, he was liable to the payment of thirty pence to his patron.

AGWEDDI (ag-gweddi) conjunction:—A portion given with a female upon her marriage.

AILLT (aill) other:—A villain.

ALLTUD (all-tud) other land:—A person, either from foreign parts or from another part of the island, in villenage under the king or a freeholder.

AMHINIOGAU TIR, land borderers:—Witnesses in a cause for landed property whose lands bordered on that in dispute.

AMMODWR (am-bod-wr) a compactor:—One before whom a compact is made, and so admissible as a witness to prove the terms of it.

AMOBR (am-gobr) fee:—The fee paid to a lord by the person subject to that payment on the marriage of a female.

AMRYGOLL (am-rhy-coll) total loss:—Loss of property, perditio.

ANCWYN (an-cwyn):—A stated allowance of provision allotted to the officers of the court in their lodgings: the term appears to be put in apposition to cwynos, cœna, or supper, as being a privileged private allowance for that meal; the cwynos being the public evening meal. Ancwyn is translated 'cœna' in some Latin copies.

ANOHYVARCH (an-cyvarch) unquestionable:—A term used for the articles which were exclusively the property of a man or woman, and not subject to division upon a separation ensuing. Generally a fine for committing various actions without permission.

ANRHAITH (an-rhaith) lawless:—Spoil.

ANRHAITH-ODDEV, spoliation sufferance:—A term used when a person's goods were confiscated and seized by the lord. See B. XIV. C. XIV.

ANRHAITH-GRIBDDAIL, pilfering spoliation:—A term for the graver spoliation to be exercised towards a homicide.

AR AC AREDIG, tith and ploughing:—A term for husbandry labours.

ARDELW (ar-delw):—A vouchee of various natures in defence. Such kind of defence was abolished by 20 H. 8. c. 6.

ARDDYRCHATAEL (ar-dyrch-gavael) an elevated hold:—The augmentation of fines. See AUGMENTATION, in Index.

ARGLWYDD (ar-clwydd) superior:—A lord, a proprietor.

ARGYVREU (ar-cyv-rhau) special ornaments:—That portion of a maiden's dower which consisted of the paraphernalia. See ARGYVREU, in Indexes.

ARIANT (argentum) silver:—Promiscuously used with ceiniog, or penny, for the silver money in use.

ARWAESAV (ar-gwaesav) support:—The person, or authority, a defendant avouches to be the guarantee of the right to property with which he is charged to be unlawfully possessed.

ASWYNWR (a-swyn-wr) a fealty man:—A proprietor who became a liege man to another proprietor; if, after remaining with him a year and a day, he returned to his own property, he was to pay three score pence to his patron.

AUR (aurum):—Gold.

AWST (aws) vigour:—August.

B.

BIDWOREN (bid-gwo-yr-eb) in readiness:—A term for the horse at the command of such officer of the household as was entitled to the privilege. In the Venedotian Code the term is 'preswyl'.

BONEDDIG (bon-eddig) lineage:—Boneddig canhwynawl, one of innate lineage, is the term used for a free Welshman of indigenous descent.

BRAINT (brain) lofty:—The term for privilege or dignity. This word is extensively used, applied to the particular tenures of land and degrees of personal liberty.

BREYR (bre-yr) mote-man:—A term applied in the laws of South Wales to those freemen who in North Wales were denominated uchelwyr. See UCHELWR.

BRIDOW (bri-Duw) dignity of God:—The term used for a solemn asseveration to the truth of a thing by a person on his faith.

C.

- CARTH, bond :—A bondman, a villein.
- CAMLWRW (cam-llwrw) mult for wrong :—A fine of three kine or nine score pence, sometimes doubled and tripled.
- CAMMIN (cam-min) crooked beak :—A species of hawk so called.
- CANGHELLOR (can-cell-or) possessor of a room :—An officer in every canghellorship, who held pleas to determine disputes among the king's villeins, and secured his waste. He was entitled to specific fees for these services.
- CANLLAW (can-llaw) at hand :—A term used for an assistant to a party engaged in law. He appears to have performed the duties of a procurator or attorney. See CYNGHAWA.
- CANTREV (cant-trev) hundred treds :—The largest fixed division of a district; it was to comprise two cymwds, but often contained more, and to consist, according to the definition given of measures, of 25,600 erw.
- CARDDYCHWEL (car-dychwel) car-returning :—Applied to such who were obliged to return to their lords or families.
- CARDOTTIR (cardawd-tir) charity land :—Land given to an eleemosynary establishment in frankalmoigne.
- CARGYCHWYN (car-cychwyn) car-moving :—A term for those who irreversibly departed from their kindred or land; also for those at liberty to reside where they pleased.
- CARLLAWEDRAWG (car-llawedr-awg) car-shattered :—A term for those who left their lords; also for such who, not being bound by any particular tie, removed at will.
- CEIDWAD (cadw-ad) a guardian :—A term taken in an extensive sense. In suits for land guardians and evidences were produced, the distinction between them being slight. A guardian swears to the thing in dispute, to his certain knowledge, being the property of the person he names; an evidence, that a certain person was dispossessed by another. A guardian charges no one with wrong doing; an evidence speaks to the outrage. The guardian proves the matter of action; the evidence the cause of action.
- CEINIOG (cain-iog) fair :—A denarius or penny. No coins have been found which can be attributed to any Welsh prince, although large deposits of Roman coins (principally of the Lower Empire) have been occasionally discovered. From the frequent mention of payments in silver some medium of circulation would seem to have been required, for which purpose the Saxon and Norman mintages, with, possibly, some worn Roman coins, might have served. The common, or curt penny, is meant generally when penny is mentioned; the legal penny was one third higher in value; the halfpenny, or dimai, was half the curt, one third of the legal penny. It is possible that this enumeration of two descriptions of pennies might have had its origin from the existence and use of the two species of denarii common during the Lower Empire, of the same relative proportions. The number of pence in the pound was 240.
- CEINIOG BALADR, spear penny :—The mulet of one penny, so called, collected from each male whom the homicide asserted to be related to him within the seventh degree, and who refused to take his oath of non-consanguinity, by the lord's officer, towards the discharge of galanas or man-bote. A female was entitled to collect this impost if amenable to the payment of murder fine, but no female was required to pay a spear penny, as it is said she had only a distaff.
- CEINION (cain) delicate :—The first drawing of liquor, the perquisite of the smith of the palace.
- CELVI (celv) work of art :—The screen which divided the hall into two portions.
- CENEDL (can) aggregate :—Clan, tribe. Cenedl y Cymry, the Welsh nation.
- CHEVRRAWR (chevr-awr) severity :—February.
- CLEDREN GWAESAYWR, pale of a protector :—If a proprietor extended his protection to another proprietor who built and tilled upon his land, and afterwards left it, the sum of six score pence was to be paid by him to his patron, which was termed 'cledren gwaes-avwr.'
- CLOCHYDD, bell-man.
- CORDDLAN (codd-llan) collective enclosure :—A hamlet.
- CORPHLAN (corph-llan) body enclosure :—A cemetery.
- COV, record.
- COV LLYS, record of court.
- COWYLL (co-wyll) covered :—The gift given by a bridegroom to the bride the morning succeeding the nuptials.
- CROES (cro) a cross :—A cross is frequently mentioned in the later series of the Welsh Laws, applied as a token that the place where it was erected was the subject of litigation, and awaited the lord's sentence. In the laws of Howel dda a surety was to enforce his suretiship by seizing the debtor's goods and delivering them to the creditor; afterwards it was enacted that suretiship should be enforced by procuring a cross from the lord, affixing it at the place in question, and then awaiting the legal determination of the suit. If either party disrespected the cross by any illegal proceedings, erecting any buildings, removal of goods, &c. on land in dispute, they became liable to the fine called camlwrw. These crosses seem to have been occasionally made of wood or laths, sometimes to have been cut or marked upon the object in question.
- CWYN, plaint.
- CWYNOR (cwyn-gos) cena :—The evening meal. On progress the lord was entitled to this meal from particular tenants, the default of which supply was punishable by fine.
- CYHYRYN CANT ASTYR, strip of a hundred contingencies :—So said of flesh of an animal stolen or hidden by a person, and sold or distributed by him; this might be traced to each receiver unto the hundredth hand, and a fine was payable for unlawful possession: beyond the hundredth hand it was not cognizable.
- CYLCR, a circle :—A progress for entertainment among the vassals. Various persons were thus privileged: the queen, the royal family, various officers of the household, the maer and canghellor, &c. This became oppressive; and we find various districts had exemptions granted to them of particular services of this nature. Gradually they were commuted for money payments. Many of them continued in practice up to the time of Queen Elizabeth, and at various periods were extinguished by heavy payments for exoneration from them.
- CYMWŶD (cy-mwd) co-mote :—Perhaps so styled from the circumstance of a court being organized in every cymwd, this being the general and lowest medium of judicature in which most causes were commenced and determined, an appeal in certain cases lying to the court of the cantrev and to that of the lord. Strictly the cymwd was to comprise fifty treds or 12,800 erw, and two cymwds formed a cantrev; this arrangement appears only to have obtained in Anglesey and some other districts most capable of tillage; in the generality of instances we find three or more cymwds in a cantrev. The most con-

istent account of the number of these respective territorial divisions in Wales occurs in the Myvyrian Archaeology, which is given in the following first and fourth columns; the second and fifth columns contain an enumeration found in the Llyvr Coch Hergest, a manuscript of the early part of the fifteenth century, rather carelessly transcribed, and therefore not free from errors; the number of cantreva in the third column is taken from Geraldus Cambrensis, whose transcribers corrupted his numerals, as the total given by him proves; in the enumeration for Powys Geraldus appears to have included only one of the divisions.

	Cantreva.			Cynwada.

Powys Vadog -	5	8	} 8	40	40
Powys Wenwynwyn	9	8		78	64
Deheubarth -	26	19	29
	55	50	44	156	140

CYNGHAW (cy-caws) co-secute:—An advocate employed in a cause. We generally find a 'cynglaw' and a 'canlaw,' a pleader and a guider, mentioned as the legal assistance of plaintiff and defendant in a suit.

CYNHASEDD (cy-tae-edd) co-fie:—An investiture fee payable to a lord upon receiving possession of land, the payment of which exonerated his successor from render of ebediw.

CYVAR (cyv-ar) co-aration:—A term for the partnership in tillage to which each person connected with it furnished an ox or two. A measure of land consisting of 3,240 yards in Caernarvonshire and Anglesey, and of 2,430 in Merioneth.

CYVHAITH (cyv-rhaith) compact:—Law in its extended sense.

D.

DADENHUDD (dad-an-hudd) re-uncover:—A term for a peculiar suit at law for the recovery of patrimony, formerly in the possession of an ancestor of the claimant, founded on the circumstance of the custom of covering the fire previous to retiring to rest, generally in modern times with a large turf, by which a smouldering fire is kept up, and uncovering it in the morning. Metaphorically the suitor claims to rekindle or re-uncover the fire of his ancestor's hearth. A chapter in each code is devoted to the recapitulation of these modes of action.

DADLAU (dadl) debate:—It is a common term for the pleas held in the courts.

DARRED (daer) closing:—A term for revenue, apparently for the fixed dues payable to the lord.

DAIAR (dai-ar) fair surface:—Soil.

DAWNBYD (dawn-bwyd) donative food:—The payments in kind which were rendered by the lord's vassals; the contributions from free vills were denominated gwestva.

DIFAETH (di-faeth) unfecund:—Unfertile land, and consequently generally waste.

DIFAITH (di-faith) unappropriated:—Waste lands, uncertain casual receipts, wrecks, all goods without an owner, &c., are so termed, and belonged to the lord.

DILTSDAWD (di-llys-dawd) unobjectionable:—Applied to a female who has been divorced, and free from any claim by the former husband.

DILYSRWYD (di-llys-rhwydd) unobjection:—A warranty by a seller of property that no claim can be substantiated to the ownership of the property other than his own.

LAWS, II.

DIMAI (dimidium) a halfpenny:—The half of the curt penny, one third of the legal penny.

DINEVWR (din-e-bwr) hill fort:—The seat of the Dimetian princes near Llandilo vawr in the vale of Tywi. Some remains of the castle are visible.

DIOVRYD (di-go-bryd) mentally fixed:—A term applied to those under vows of restraint from marriage, flesh, and equitation.

DIRWY (dir) force:—There were two kinds of fine imposed upon offenders. The dirwy was twelve kine, or three pounds; the other, or camlwrw, three kine, or nine score pence. Dirwy signifies sometimes, but rarely, various amounts of fine.

DOVOD (dov) appropriated:—A term for property of any kind casually found; if no owner appeared for it after three public proclamations of the event, it then lapsed to the prince. See B. vi. C. 1. s. 69.

DOVRAETH (dovr) domesticity:—The quarters which the villeins were to afford to the lord's retainers.

DYDDIAU DYDDON, days of days:—The weekly periods succeeding Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide.

E.

EREDIW (obitu) a heriot:—A relief payable to the superior lord in most cases by the heir of a defunct vassal. Where the person in his lifetime had paid a cynhasedd or investiture fee it absolved the successor from the payment of ebediw.

EBRILL (eb-rhill) vegetation:—April.

EDDYL (e-dyl) duty:—Angen eddyl, necessary duty; eddyl arglwydd, duty to a lord, &c., occur in the Laws.

EDLING (ed-ling) next in line:—The appellation of the 'atheling,' or nearest heir to the sovereignty.

ENLLYN (en-llyn) liquid:—Companagium, or accompaniments to bread of any kind.

ERW (ar-w) what has been tilled:—A measure applied exclusively to arable lands; it appears to have contained about 4,320 yards.

ERW DIFONDEDIA, escheated erw:—So said of land that for want of a heir escheated to the king. In the trev gyvriw, or register vill, any such land was equally divided among the remaining occupiers, hence no land therein escheated to the lord.

ERW Y GWYDD, plough erw:—An erw of the co-tillage set apart as plough-bote, the produce of which was to defray the expenses incidental to the making and repairing the plough.

ERW YN YCH DU, erw of the black ox:—An erw of corn allotted to an individual whose ox might die during the period of co-aration, towards compensating his loss.

ETIVEDD (e-ti-medd) possession:—A heir.

F.

FERN (ferpm) a mess:—Sometimes used for 'saig,' a word of the same import.

FYRNIGRWYDD (fwrn-ig-rhwydd) ferocity:—Acts of theft accompanied by brutal violence, as burning the house whence the goods were stolen, or mutilating animals through malice, and similar acts, are said to be ferocious, and the punishment for them thereby enhanced generally twofold.

G.

- GAIR, a word:—Used in various significations:—An enquiry, an order; as, 'Gair yw ei air ev ar bawb: his word is paramount to that of every one;' testimony, as, 'Gair yw ei gair hi yna: her word is there conclusive.'
- GAIR COLLEDIG, a losing word:—Signifying a wrong phrase introduced in a plea.
- GAIR CYVARCH, a word of enquiry:—Used when the judges dispatched one of their number to interrogate either party to a suit what vouchers they had to substantiate their plea.
- GALANAS (gal-an-as) homicide:—This term is often applied to the sum assessed upon the criminal and his relatives as the retribution for murder as well as for the crime itself.
- GALANAS WASGARAWG, distributive galanas:—So said of the murder-fine to be imposed in specific proportions upon the several grades of kindred related to the criminal; the proportions in which it was receivable by similar grades of kindred to the murdered person being the same as the liabilities to the charge.
- GALANASDRA (galanas-tra) galanas-fund:—It was matter of objection to a witness in a cause if he had not paid his proportion of a homicide fine for the murder of a relative of the objector, one of the parties to a suit.
- GAUAYDY (gauav-ty) a winter house:—Otherwise called 'hendrev,' old vill, an appellation very common in Wales for residences in the vallies. The bothy, or residence in the hills, was styled the 'havotty,' or summer house.
- GAVAEL (gav) a hold:—In one sense a division of land containing four rhandirs or 64 erwes; a post supporting the roof of a building; a pledge.
- GELGI (gel-ci) covert dog:—The covert hound and the greyhound are the two species of dogs enumerated in the laws as used in hunting. In the time of Howel dda it is stated that beagles were unknown.
- GOBR, a fee:—This term is frequently and extensively used.
- GOBR CYTRAITH, fee for law:—The fee due to the judge or judges who decided a cause.
- GOBR GWARCHADW, fee for custody:—A fee of six score pence paid by a person, returning after long absence in foreign parts, for participation in his ancestors' landed property, to the relations in possession.
- GOBR MANAG, fee for discovery:—The tenth penny of the value of any thing, due to the person who pointed out where a stolen article might be found.
- GOBR MERCH, maiden fee. See AMOBR.
- GOBR YSTYN, investiture fee:—Paid by a person when invested by the rod with landed property by a lord. This fee exonerated his heirs from the charge of ebediw upon his demise.
- GODAROG (go-tae-og) sub-commoner:—A villein of inferior degree.
- GODDAITH (go-daith) partial spread:—Applied to clearing the stubbles or the furze and heather upon the hills, to improve the pasturage, by fire. This operation was restricted, under a penalty, to the month of March.
- GOLWYTHU (go-glwyth) a delicacy:—A stag in season was accounted to contain twelve legal golwyths or collops, for each of which a fine of three score pence was imposed upon the unprivileged person who might kill such a stag.
- GOREGYN (gor-es-own) to super-ascend:—Applied to the progeny of a villein or alien which, after the ninth generation, or four successive contracts of marriage with native Welshwomen, by which each child gained an additional degree in rank, was entitled to the enjoyment of five erwes of land from the lord; such became accounted a native Welshman, and was styled 'goresgyuydd,' superascendant, or acquirer of privilege.
- GORPHENHAV (gor-pen-hav) end of the flush:—July; so called, from the flush of the growth of grass being then ended.
- GORVODOG (gorvod-og) constrained:—A surety for any person accused of crime; as 'macl' signified a surety for debt or compact.
- GORVOTTREY (gorvod-trey) extra vill:—This term occurs only in Gwent, where the divisions of land differed from the other districts. In each maenol in Gwent thirteen treva were computed, one of which was the gorrvtrey or supernumerary trev. See INDEX.
- GORSAY (gor-sav) firm stay.
- GORSAY ARV, deposit of a weapon:—Armed persons resorting to church or court were to place their weapons in certain specified places, where, if a mischance happened to any person from them, no blame attached to the owner; whereas if left in another place they were answerable for any accidental wound inflicted by them.
- GORSAY GWELJG, stay of a wife:—So said when a woman separated from her husband; after the division of the property she was to remain at the house until the ninth day to superintend the final transport of all articles belonging to her; also in case of his death she was entitled to a division of the goods and a similar period for preparing to depart.
- GOREDD (gor-sedd) supreme session:—This term is used for any extraordinary or paramount session presided over by a lord.
- GORWLAD (gor-gwlad) outer country:—The bordering regions to the one in question.
- GOSGORDD (gos-cordd) collection:—The king's retinue, being his officers, minstrels, &c.
- GOSTEG (gos-teg) to make clear.
- GOSTEG AR Y MAES, silence in the field:—The court in pleas for landed property being held on the land in dispute, the proclamation of silence in the field was appropriate.
- GRE, a herd:—Generally of horses, a stud of which consisted of fifty mares and a stallion. Some appellations of hills have 'gre' in their composition, as, 'Moel greon,' hill of the stud, 'Moel y greorion,' hill of the stud keepers; they were entitled to a progress among the lord's villeins. 'Conigre,' or a rabbit warren, seems derived from this root.
- GWAALAETH (gwa-alaeth) offspring:—A chief not an edling nor head of a family.
- GWADDOL (gwadd) a settlement:—A portion given with a female.
- GWAFSAV (gwafes-av) support:—A pledge or guarantee. See ARWAESAV.
- GWAEBAVWR. See CLEDREN GWAEBAVWR.
- GWAEITIR (gwaed-tir) blood land:—Land given up as compensation for homicide.
- GWALLAWGAIR (gwallawg-gair) a losing word:—A faulty word in pleading.
- GWARRANT (gwar-ant) extreme:—A guarantee.
- GWARCHEIDWAD (gwar-cadw-ad) custodier:—One who preserves landed property for the right owner.
- GWARTHAWL, something to boot, to make equivalent.
- GWARTHEG DIVACH (di-vach) cattle without surety:—So it has been rendered by Wotton, and in the former part of this edition. Upon further consideration, in the Latin copies it has been glossed 'stemmatis defecti,' as if the word 'divach' was compounded of div-ach, extinct lineage. The fine for homicide, committed by the son of a Welshwoman by an alien father, to which the term refers, was to be paid solely by the relations of the mother, there being no lineage on the father's side to be found in Wales; the cattle payment of the whole fine by the female side would therefore very appropriately be styled, cattle of defective lineage.

GWARTRUDD (gwarth-grudd) shame of face:—See GWYNEBWARTH.

GWAYW, pair:—A spear.

GWEIROLAWDD (gwair-clawdd) hay enclosure.

GWELI (gwal) open:—A wound.

GWR DYVOD, an adventurer:—One who took possession of land upon which none of his progenitors resided; a squatter.

GWR NOD, a man of note or mark:—It is difficult to discover the precise definition of this term. Where one manuscript has 'Heb gæth heb allud: without bondman, without alien,' another reads, 'Heb alludion heb wyr nod: without aliens, without a nod man;' thus making nod men synonymous with bond men. Compurgators are often to be one half nod men, the other half such as can be had. In some instances the nod men would appear to signify persons known to belong to the clan. 'Nod y genedl, mark of the tribe,' is used for some distinguishing mark inscribed upon boundary stones, &c. 'Nod' is synonymous in signification with 'notus.'

GWRAICTRA (gwraig-tra) woman-fraud:—When a witness was about to give testimony in a cause, if the opponent could prove he lived in adultery with his wife, it was a ground of objection to the receipt of his evidence.
